CANADA'S GOLD COINAGE

Demand for it is Growing—Supplies Come From Widely Opposite Points

In a period of seven months the Royal Mint at Ottawa enriched Canadian currency by minting eight hundred thousand dollars' worth of Canadian gold coin in denominations of five and ten dollars. There is a steady but not as yet very large demand for the gold pieces, and the output averages about $150,000 per month. The banks as a rule are not very sympathetic towards the popularization of a Canadian gold coinage. They prefer to keep their own notes in circulation, as being easier to handle and at the same time more profitable to them. The gold coin issues of the Mint, as well as the silver and bronze coin issues, depend largely on the demands of the banks as transmitted to the Finance Department through the Receiver-General's offices throughout the Dominion.

There is a very large amount of United States gold coinage in circulation in Canada, and some tens of millions' worth of the United States gold pieces are held in the Federal Treasury at Ottawa as security for the bank and Federal note issues.

The gold minted at Ottawa comes principally from the Yukon and Nova Scotia. Porcupine gold was tried for minting purposes, but it was not accepted because not sufficiently refined to be handled at the refinery of the Mint.

The Ottawa Mint has a capacity of about 100,000 coins per day.

A fine piece of blue mohair is used in this dress, which is trimmed with bits of striped taffeta and plain bone buttons. It has the advantage of being easy to put on, as it fastens down the front with invisible hooks and eyes. The soft turn-over collar and the tailored belt are made of the striped taffeta. The sleeves are neither too full nor too tight for comfort, and the waist is made plain across the shoulders with a slight fulness at the belt. The skirt is devoid of trimming except for the strip of taffeta which extends down the front in a straight line from waist to hem. It is cut in round length just to miss the floor. Patent boots, chamois gloves and a neat, little street hat complete this natty costume.

SNARED A MOOSE

Huge Animal Caught by Rope Suspended From Bent Bough

One of the most remarkable and daring instances of moose killing reported for many years was unearthed by the Province of Quebec Fish and Game Protection Association.

Two wardens brought to Montreal a fine moose skin weighing fifty pounds, which they had seized in a tanner's establishment at Rimouski. The animal was killed within the game preserves of the Anglo-American Fish and Game Club. A further remarkable point is that the animal was caught in a snare, the first instance of a moose being taken in this way for more than forty years.

The snare consisted of a bough of a tree bent towards the ground with a rope and noose at the end. When the animal put his head in the loop the branch sprang upwards, lifting him off the ground and hanging by the neck. As a moose weighs from 1,400 to 1,500 pounds, great care had to be exercised in selecting a bough sufficiently strong to bear the weight.

The Finest Wild Rose

The world's finest wild rose is the great brier rose which was introduced in 1889 by the late Col. Sir Henry Colett from the Shan Hills of Upper Burma. The specimen in the Himalayan House at Kew refused to bloom until 1910, when four flowers appeared, the number being increased last year to eight.

This year the plant produced a profusion of large white blossoms with yellow stamens, which were greatly admired.

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

—BY—

CLIVE PHILLIPPS WOLLEY

(AUTHOR OF "GOLD, GOLD IN CARIBOO," ETC.)

Supplied Exclusively in Canada by The British & Colonial Press Service, Limited.

It was as if the dead man was playing a grim game with his old cronies. At last it reached the road, which wound round the base of the hill.

"Well, I'm blanked, if that don't beat everything. The old man always was pig-headed, but who'd have thought he'd have kicked like that at being packed, and he's a corpse!"

"Guess he thinks he can take care of hisself now same as he allus did. He's crossed this trail many a night when he hadn't any more sense than he has now."

But the stillness of the body brought back some of the old feeling of awe.

"Hush!" said one. "What are you giving us? That ain't no way to talk before corpses."

"Corpse or no corpse," said a bolder spirit, "it's a long time between drinks, and this burying is a mighty dry entertainment. Doc! Let's have a look at that bottle."

The doctor produced the medicine, which was labelled Scott and Mackay's Special, and in turn each of the mutes drank to their old companion.

"Guess he'll travel more sociable now," said Al, wiping his mouth with his coat sleeve. "But we'll have to pack him ourselves. Got to take off our frills for that business," and with a sigh of relief every man took off his coat, and tied it in a pack on his back.

At this point Jim Combe joined them, was given a drink and solemnly introduced to the corpse.

In return he lent a hand at bearing it, and abandoning all ideas of a processional pace, or the decorum of silence, the party in its shirt sleeves, trotted to within sight of Soda Creek before dark. Here, however, the procession paused, reformed, put on its coats and funeral face, and marched with great pomp to the door of the Ideal.

Here, again, an unexpected difficulty met them. The Ideal was the only place to which any one went on arriving at Soda Creek, but in spite of the former habits of their charge, it was evidently now no place for Mr. Hayes.

"Poor old hoss, I guess you ain't allowed in here now. Where'll we take him to, doc?"

An empty house was suggested where the body would be safe from the dogs until the clergyman came for it next day, and there it was locked up for the night.

But even then the doctor was not ready for his patient at the Risky Ranch. By unanimous consent it was held fitting that Soda Creek should celebrate old man Hayes' reception in due form, and no protest on Jim's part was of any avail. The men had had enough whiskey to make them as stubborn as mules. Jim Combe was in despair. Every drink that the reckless crowd took made it more noisy and more quarrelsome, whilst the doctor was rapidly progressing from the convivial to the maudlin stage of drunkenness.

Finally Protheroe declared his intention of going to take one drink with the old man.

"Let him alone where he is," urged Ed. "He won't understand now."

"Wonsh undershtand, wonsh he? You think he'sh gone away. Nonsensh; he'sh here all right. He'll undershtand, you bet."

The idea was too grisly. That any poor devil should be condemned even after death's release to hang round the Ideal, struck Jim as the climax of horrors to which hell itself would be a mild punishment.

But he saw in the sot's determination his own opportunity. Going up to the only man in the place who was still sober, he touched him on the shoulder.

"Bill, would you do something for a woman?"

The big man, who was still drowsing by the stove, started from his apathy.

"A woman? There ain't no woman here. It's only whiskey and hell."

"But there's women elsewhere, down to the Risky Ranch, ~~for instance.~~ Will you do something to help one of them?"

"Anythin'," he said, rising.

"Then go up into that fellow's room," pointing to the doctor, "and corral all his outfit, instruments and grip-sack, whatever he takes along with him when he goes visiting. No one will notice you as you live here, and if they do they are too drunk to mind."

"What do you want it for?"

"There's a woman dying down to the Risky, and I've got to get that little hog and his fixin's to save her. You heard him say he wouldn't come."

"I did, curse him; but he won't be any good like that. They never are any good when you want them," and he sank back into his dreams.

"He won't be like that when I get him to the Risky. Will you do it?"

"All right; if it's for a woman," and he slouched off to the part of the house where its boarders slept.

Meanwhile Jim Combe went out to secure his own horse and another. The latter part of the business was horse-stealing, almost the worst offence in Cattledom, but he had lied already to a friend, and was meditating a worse offence than horse-stealing.

When he had tied the two horses at the back of the empty house in which old man Hayes lay, he returned to the bar room.

There he found his ally, Bill.

"Have you got the things?"

"Yes."

"Then sneak out and cinch them on tight behind the saddle of my horse, a big red roan, tied up behind the house where Hayes' body lies, and wait there for me. Don't make any mistake, and don't speak till I do."

Bill took his orders in silence, and whilst he slipped out at the back, Jim Combe went up to the bar, and called for drinks for the crowd.

"Thought you was going to take a drink with the old man," he said to the doctor, who was now half asleep.

"So I wash, but I can't get any fellow to go along."

"And you're too scared to go alone? I thought you were a scientific joker, who didn't believe in ghosts or spirits, or any of them things you can't see or stick a knife into."

"Don'sh know what I believe, and I don'sh know what blanked business it is of yours, anyway, but I'm not scared of anything, Mishter Jim Combe, if you are a foot taller than me."

Jim laughed aggravatingly. He knew the man's peculiarities.

"Why, you're afraid right now. I'll bet you the next round of drinks that you dare not go alone to take a glass with old Hayes."

The bet just suited the humor of the crowd, besides the form of settlement touched their personal interest.

"It's up to you, doc," they cried. "You're the little man to win his money."

To do the doctor justice, he was no coward, drunk or sober.

"Hand me the bottle, Ike," he said, rallying in the most extraordinary manner, and speaking quite soberly. "And one of those glasses. See you again, gentlemen," and he walked towards the door.

"I guess it's my money that's up, so if no one has any objection, I'll still hunt the doc and see that he goes right to it. That's the bet, isn't it?" asked Combe.

"I guess so."

"Nobody else leaves the room until we come back. I don't want the doctor's friends handy to keep his courage up."

"He don't want any. Don't you worry. The doc's got as much grit as the next man."

"Appears like it," said Jim, and stole out, shutting the door noiselessly behind him.

CHAPTER XIII.

Abduction

Very solemnly and placing each foot with carefully calculated precision, the little doctor made his way from the Ideal to the place where old man Hayes had been stored out of the way of the dogs.

The awful heat and closeness of the bar room which he had left, made the chill of the night air more noticeable. It struck him like a bar of cold iron across the forehead and made him catch his breath with a gasp. But his errand had no terror for him. He was one of those who, having learned a great deal about the mechanism of the human body, looked upon it as an indifferent piece of machinery capable of many improvements, and having about it nothing of the supernatural.

As a locomotive he considered it beneath contempt. Walking was at best but a succession of falls avoided. That had always been his opinion, but he had never known so much difficulty before in getting up that hind prop in time to save a collapse.

Before starting from the bar room door he had taken a line upon the house which he wished to reach, and he had contrived not to lose sight of his points, but it was difficult to keep them, moving as he felt compelled to do, as a knight moves at chess.

Earth seemed for once to have no solidity; the laws of gravity in his particular case seemed to have been suspended: his feet would not keep down and he suffered from an almost irresistible temptation to allow his legs to collapse altogether, a temptation which arose from a growing conviction that they really had nothing whatever to do with him, and that he could move perfectly well by the mere exertion of will power. But he was not sufficiently drunk yet to yield to this temptation. He still had some control over his memory, and he remembered that he had tried that game before, and had been found in the street very cold indeed the next morning.

Dr. Protheroe had a considerable knowledge of the many infirmities of the flesh, but his knowledge of the different expressions of alcoholic dementia was comprehensive. He even diagnosed his own case accurately as he staggered along.

"Drunk," he said, severely; "very drunk. 'Tuh the cold air has done it. Alwaysh does it; but I'm not 'fraid. Who said Doctor Protheroe was 'fraid?"

He stopped, swaying dangerously in the middle of the dark street to think out that problem, but even his mind could only move now as the knight moves. It would not go straight.

"Doctor Protheroe 'fraid?" he repeated this two or three times in a sort of sing-song, and then, suddenly:

"Dr. Protheroe," he said. "Doc-tor Prother—oe, Thomash's, — London — England. Not Ontario! None of your bloomin' Canadian 'boot me. Doctor Protheroe, Thomash's, London, England. Gentleman; professhional man," and then he burst into peal upon peal of derisive laughter, in the midst of which he fell flat upon his face in the mud.

After lying there for a few minutes chuckling still to himself, he rose upon his hands and knees, reached for his hat, put it rakishly upon the back of his head, and continued his journey upon all fours.

"Varicoshe veins," he muttered, as he went. "Shyatica, gout, notin' to do wi' whiskey. All rot. Cause—abshurd attempt violate lawsh of nature. Man dam fool; meant to walk on four legsh, tries to walk on two. Poshterior limbs over worked; painful shwelling followsh. Of course." But in spite of the excellence of his reasoning he was obliged after a time to conform to custom, and finished his journey in a wild burst upon two legs, which landed him in a heap at the old man's door.

The violent exercise did something to counteract the effects of the chill air upon his heated brain, but not enough. He could remember that the door fastened with a latch; he could even repeat to himself the necessary instructions for lifting the latch; but for the life of him he could not find it.

Sitting upon the ground with his eyes carefully shut, and talking rapidly but incoherently, he explored the whole door from the mud to within six inches of the lock half a dozen times, and at last concluding that he must have reached the wrong side of the house, began to crawl round it, until utterly weary, he sank despairingly into a peculiarly cold puddle, from which lowly station he beat intermittently upon the solid pine logs of the wall imploring old man Hayes to "get up and let a fellow in." At last oblivion came to him, but not in the kindly fashion to which he had grown accustomed. There was a difficulty about his breathing which he did not remember to have noticed on previous occasions. It was quite natural that he should have turned over on his back, but his head was rolling about in an unusual way, and there seemed to be an obstruction in front of his mouth.

"Asphyxiashun," he decided. "Unusual symptom, rather think unnatural. Not had enough whiskey for that," and then he went out into space where nothing mattered, and thought itself became a mere succession of vague and disconnected suggestions.

One of these, the most persistent, was that he was flying. He remembered, as you do in dreams, that he had done this before. He had never been quite certain whether it was in dreams that he flew, or in waking life. The dream had always seemed so real, but he knew that he was flying now. He felt himself going up and up, and it was only will which supplied the motive power. He knew that because he tried to flap his wings and could not. They were tied to his sides.

"Heave him up on to the pinto, Bill. He's dead to the world."

"How is he going to stick on?"

"You heave him up," insisted Combe from the other side of the stolen horse, "I'll fix that. He'll ride as well as the pinto's last passenger."

"The old man in there," replied Bill, looking over his shoulder nervously, and speaking in a hushed voice.

"Yes. Can you steady him like that whilst I throw a hitch around him. Don't let him roll."

"I'll try, Jim; but his legs are like water. You can't hold them. They slip all ways to once."

"They won't do that long. Now! How's that?"

Combe had taken the tie rope from the pinto's saddle, and with it had lashed the doctor's feet together under the belly of his horse, after which he had passed the bight of the rope round his victim's waist and secured him firmly by it to the horn of the saddle.

"I guess he'll ride like that for a bit," he said, looking critically at his work. "Seems pretty well packed, doesn't he?" and taking the doctor by the shoulder he swayed him tentatively in the saddle.

"Yes, he'll stay there till you untie him, but what are you going to tell the ferryman?"

"That's my trouble. I'm blanked if I know how I'm going to fix that, unless I gag him too. I wish the doctor was not too drunk to sit on by himself."

"If he wasn't he wouldn't go."

"Yes, he would, with this," and the light flickered on a barrel hardly harder than the speaker's face.

Bill looked at Combe, doubtfully. He had known Jim many years, but had never seen the man he saw now. The sight staggered him and made him doubtful of the share he had taken in the proceedings.

"You don't mean no foul play by him, do you?"

"No, of course not. A dead one ain't no good. Hand me his bridle," and Combe reached from the saddle for it. But Bill held on to it.

"See here, Jim, this is a mighty ugly business. It is for a woman?"

"For a woman, sure. Hand over, or they'll be after us."

Still the man doubted, and Combe saw a bar of light in the front of the Ideal. Some one had opened the door to look out. The crowd was growing impatient for its drinks.

There was no time to be lost. It was cruel, but he had to do it.

"Bill," he hissed, "when she died, wouldn't you have done this or any other blanked thing to save her?"

"My God, yes," was the startled answer. Without further demur Bill handed over the bridle and Jim, turning the horses sharply down hill, disappeared into the night, whilst the widower slunk through the back premises into the Ideal.

CHAPTER XIV.

It seemed to the doctor that his pace was suddenly accelerated. In his dream flight he began to move with quite phenomenal rapidity. In all previous expeditions of the kind, the motion had been a steady sailing, so steady that if he had not seen the steeples and towns going by below him, he would have considered himself absolutely stationary in space. This time he was going at a great speed and jerkily. Yes, certainly jerkily, and the atmosphere was becoming decidedly colder. He had not had a [illegible] of cold air. [illegible] was in fact rocketting. That was it, he was rocketting. Quite natural, he reflected. You hit a bird in the head and it rockets. The whiskey has hit me in the head and it rockets. Certainly I am rocketting.

But as his thoughts grew less vague his body grew more and more cold. The spirit was dying out in his blood, and his tightly bound extremities were beginning to freeze.

He became conscious that he was no longer in the streets of Soda Creek. He could hear horses' feet and gravel which rattled and slid beneath them, and a jerk which threw him heavily upon his horse's neck woke him to the fact that he was riding down an extremely steep incline into a grey sea of icy vapor.

It has been said that Doctor Protheroe was one of those men who had the faculty of becoming drunk a dozen times in the twenty-four hours. His recovery from the effects of drink was as rapid as his lapse into drunkenness and now his brain began to work again almost normally.

He realised that he was riding tied in his saddle, his arms pinioned and his mouth gagged, and that someone, also riding, was leading his horse along the edge of a grey flood from which came a roar and an incessant grinding sound. Dr. Protheroe's earliest impression of a river was the union of a dozen tiny springs which well up from the earth's heart amongst meadow sweet and fritillaries, in his native Wiltshire, or at the wildest a junction of little brown rills which wind chattering to their meeting place through the purple heather of that which English folk call a mountain, and so gathered and united, wander on, picking up a little friend here and another more fully grown further on, until together they turn a miller's wheel or dream through lush hay fields to the sea.

But the Fraser, by which that silent figure led him, is not a river of this kind.

Born of the snows in that barren land where earth's ribs show above the last of the black pines, the Fraser is bitter and savage from its birth. There are no lush grass lands for it to flow through, no miller's wheels for it to turn.

Its course is through sand and gravel; that it is gold gravel makes it no more beautiful; past grey benches stained in leprous patches by vivid metallic colors. It has nothing to do with farming until, weary of life and retired from business, it reaches its muddy delta, where it farms because it is too feeble to do anything else.

Its life's work was mining. It is the great sluice box of northern British Columbia, the great water power which eats away the gold-bearing rocks, which builds the sand bars and feeds them year by year with much fine gold, which tempts the strongest of our men with the possibility of quickly earned wealth, and having sucked their lives out of them, leaves them stranded in such back waters as Soda Creek.

The banks of it under which Jim Combe led the doctor's stumbling horse, were sheer cliffs of gravel, the raw edges of a great earth wound, through which the river tore its course, and the brim of it was no place of primroses, but a fringe of great boulders, too heavy even for its strong waters to move, and here and there the bones of a stranded pine.

Far overhead the two could see a few tall conifers, towering in the night mist, and behind them, up stream, the dull red light which marked the centre of such life as there was in Soda Creek.

When a cable crossed the river they paused, and Jim dismounting went down to the water's edge. The ferry was there, moored to the bank, the ice-cakes gathering round it as it lay, but there was no boatman by it, and the little shack in which he sheltered was empty. Jim got into the ferry and tried to move it, but the chain of it was secured by a great padlock. It was kept for the public's convenience and the ferryman's profit, and the ferryman had gone.

"Curse it. That's what I might have expected," Jim muttered, "but I didn't see him in the saloon when we left."

For a time he wrestled with the lock and tried to break it with a boulder from the beach, but such attempts had been foreseen and the fastenings were too strong to yield to rude surgery.

"Doesn't matter much if they do come now," he said to himself, and began to hulloa on the off-chance that the ferryman might be within hearing. He even took out his revolver and fired a shot, but for awhile there was no response. The ferryman had concluded that his cowboy passenger of the morning was as other cowboys he had known, and would be as long over his half-hour's business as they had been, and, Cariboo, being a free country, he had gone where he listed.

But the revolver shot had roused others, if it had not called the ferryman. The red glow in the centre of the townlet was redder now and larger. The door of the Ideal was wide open, and there were voices on the night air, the voices of men which grew clearer as he listened. Possibly Bill's suspicions had found voice at the last moment, the revolver shot having confirmed them, and now the whole drunken gang was out looking for the doctor and his abductor. It did not matter much. He could easily escape such a posse as they were likely to form, but he turned towards his captive. It was no use keeping him any longer.

"Hulloa, you are awake, are you? Want them wraps off your mouth?" he asked, cynically. "They'll keep the cold off your chest," but he moved towards him and released the doctor from his gag.

"You might as well untie my hands whilst you are about it. They are nearly frozen already," said Protheroe in a matter-of-fact tone.

Jim looked at him in some surprise. The sobering effect of the ride had been even greater than he had anticipated.

"I guess you can sit on them by yourself," he remarked, unfastening the rope which bound his captive's legs, before freeing his hands. "Steady! Don't fall off as you ride back, and don't try any monkey tricks with me. It ain't worth it," and then, reassured by the doctor's appearance, he let his hands go.

"Now you might as well ride back and finish the night with your pals. Sorry I troubled you."

But the doctor remained sitting where he was.

"You ain't afraid about finding your way, are you?" asked Combe. "They'll be here pretty soon now, if they don't fall in and get drowned. I'm not coming along. Soda Creek might not be healthy for me just now."

Still the doctor sat where he was, stretching his cramped legs, feeling the stiffened muscles of his arms, swaying a little in his saddle, and looking at Combe.

The Second "Made-in-Canada" Train is Making a Tour of Western Canada

Western Canadians will be interested to know that the "Made-in-Canada" train whose initial trip through the three Prairie Provinces last year was so successful, is making another tour this year, though for the most part over a different route. This exhibition on wheels which is organized and conducted by the Canadian Home Market Association, presents in attractive and condensed form many products made in Canadian factories by Canadian workmen. While all the cities of the West are more or less familiar with the hum of factory life, the greater number of places visited by the "Made-in-Canada" train have few manufacturing industries as yet. The "Made-in-Canada" special with its numerous products proves to Westerners whose occupation is chiefly grain growing that practically every implement on the farm, every article in the home, and everything they wear is or may be of Canadian make. Canadians may be classified as Producers or Consumers, though every citizen is something of both. The Western farm produces grain in great abundance. The exhibitions of Western grain in Eastern Canada has done much to send Easterners to the West. But the Western farmer is also a consumer of manufactured goods, and one of the purposes of the "Made-in-Canada" train is to give him first-hand knowledge of goods made in Canada.

In Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are many thousands of farmers who have come from across the line. They are accustomed to American products and naturally continue their use in Canada. They are ready, however to hear and see what Canada is producing. The "Made-in-Canada" train gives them this information. At first hand they inspect Canadian goods.

Representatives of the firms exhibiting on the "Made-in-Canada" special are on the train, and are glad to learn of the natural resources and other advantages for manufacturing of Western districts visited. In fact, the manufacturer of the East is depending on information gleaned on this trip to give him an idea of what can be done along industrial lines in the Prairie Provinces. The exhibition and the various features in connection with it are thoroughly in accord with the policy of encouraging industries to locate in the various Western districts. Than this train there is no better opportunity afforded of acquainting the citizens of the West generally with the meaning of industries to the community.

The Canadian Home Market Association found it easy to decide to send the "Made-in-Canada" train to the West again this year. In the attendance and in the sympathetic and intelligent interest of visitors to the train last year, the trip far exceeded the expectations of the committee. All along the route, leading citizens as well as the community generally heartily endorsed the train as an educational undertaking, declaring that such a purely Canadian project was worthy of unanimous support and of repetition from year to year.

Among the new exhibits on the "Made-in-Canada" train is a large display of fresh fruit under the direction of the Ontario Department of Agriculture. Here the Western citizen will see a magnificent display of apples, pears, peaches, plums, grapes and other fruits. There will be other products of mixed farming, some of which, it is believed can be successfully cultivated in the West to a very much greater extent than at present.

The Preacher's Mistake

The minister of a country church was greatly annoyed on Sundays by the women turning every time anyone came in. The next time he preached he gave out the following notice: "So that you need not turn round I will call out the name of the person or persons entering this church during service." Then he started: "Dearly beloved brother—Farmer Jacobs and his wife—in the seventh chapter—Mrs. Brown and baby—of the first book—Mr. and Mrs. Smith with a new hat on." Here he discovered his mistake, but it was too late. All the women in the place had looked round.

Save Your Vases

When valuable vases are used for table decoration they should first of all be filled with sand. This makes them stand firm, and there is less chance of their being knocked over and broken.

Gained in Weight, Digestion Restored, Health Renewed

Here is More Proof of Quick Cure For All Folks That are Weak, Ailing, Nervous.

More Praise for Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

For a period last summer the thought of food excited feelings of nausea," writes Mrs. C. A. Dodge, of Bloomsbury. "The least bit made me listless and the distaste for food reduced me to condition of semi-starvation and brought me to the verge of nervous collapse. Tonics were useless to restore an active desire for food. The doctors told me my liver and kidneys were both at fault, but the medicines they gave me were too severe and reduced my strength so that I had to abandon them. At the suggestion of a friend who had been cured of blood and skin trouble, I began the use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. The difference I first noticed was, that while they cleansed the system, instead of feeling weaker I felt better after taking them. Indeed their activity was so mild it was easy to forget I had taken them at all; they seemed to go right to the liver, and in a very brief time not only did all source of nausea disappear, but I began to crave food and I digested it reasonably well. Then I began to put on weight until within three months I was brought to a condition of good health. I urge Dr. Hamilton's Pills for all who are in poor health."

Get this best of all medicines to-day and refuse a substitute for Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. Sold by all druggists and storekeepers, 25c. per box or five for $1.00. Sent postpaid by The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

YESTERDAY'S POLICE COURT.

At yesterday's police court, John Campbell pleaded guilty to having been drunk on Thursday. John, who appeared charged with having been drunk on the previous day and allowed ten days to dig up a $2 fine, seems to have not gone to work at the De Laval Works, as promised, but to have taken a job of unloading schooners of beer. John promptly pleaded guilty yesterday and asked for a chance to mix cement at the De Laval Works. However, Chief Thompson asked for a week's remand as he wished to investigate another matter. A local manufacturer was charged with having been drunk. He pleaded not guilty and was remanded until this morning.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

YOUTHFUL WRINKLENESS SKIN EASY TO HAVE

(Elberta Reid, in Woman's Tribune).

You who desire to regain a youthful appearance will do well to make the acquaintance of the two simple, but valuable, prescriptions here given.

To make an effective wrinkle-remover, mix an ounce of powdered saxolite and a half-pint witch hazel. Bathe the face in the solution—immediately every wrinkle is affected. It acts wonderfully on sagging facial muscles, also, the lotion, possessing remarkable astringent and tonic properties.

To get rid of an aged, faded, freckled or discolored complexion, but an ounce of common mercolized wax at any drug store and apply nightly as you would cold cream, washing in the mornings with soap and water. This will slowly absorb the undesirable surface skin, revealing the younger, brighter, healthier skin underneath. I know of nothing to equal this treatment as a facial rejuvenator.

SOCIETY GIRL WHITE SLAVER

Ex-Husband of Mrs. Alice Folliard, of Memphis, Said to Be Salesman in Orleans

Memphis, Tenn., July 11.—Alleged to have brought and enticed women and girls from three states to an exclusive rendezvous on South Second street, near Vance avenue, Mrs. Alice Folliard, divorcee, whose former husband was supposed to be working in New Orleans as travelling salesman, was arrested here today on charges of white slavery and conspiracy against the United States laws.

The arrest was made by C. R. Nicon, white slave agent, who alleged that Mrs. Folliard, formerly prominent in certain local society clubs, is alleged to have threatened to expose Mrs. Maud Luster, 24, Laurel, Miss., to her parents last Christmas unless she returned to the South Second street residence.

Arrested with Mrs. Folliard is Harry Wiggins. He is held as a witness.

SAY SHE BROUGHT GIRL FROM PEORIA, ILL.

At the instigation of Mrs. Folliard, Wiggins is alleged to have written Miss Rachel Kear, Peoria, Ill., offering to pay her railroad fare to Memphis if she would come here and reside at Mrs. Folliard's home. Miss Kear is alleged to have come to Memphis in response of the efforts of the two. It was on this specific instance that the warrants were served.

Mrs. Folliard's operations are alleged to cover a period of three years and to have included Mississippi, Missouri and Illinois. The authorities think that many other points in the South are involved and are conducting an inquiry along that line. Conviction on the conspiracy charge carries a sentence of ten years exclusive of possible sentence if found guilty of white slavery.

HER HUSBAND SAID TO BE IN NEW ORLEANS.

Mrs. Folliard separated from her husband some years ago. The little daughter was placed in a fashionable girl's school of the city and Folliard is reported to have gone to New Orleans.

Mrs. Folliard chose the immoral manner of subsistence following the divorce and furnished up the South Second street residence with the elaborateness of a queen's boudoir.

Once in her clutches, the Federal authorities say, it was nigh impossible for the victims to escape. It is alleged that they were watched by servants and others almost night and day, and sensational testimony is expected in regard to the imprisonment of married women, and girls, as the case might be, at the residence.

ENGLISH TORIES ARE NOW IN HOPELESSLY BAD CONDITION

Since The House of Lords Has Been Shorn of Power The Conservative Party Are Helpless

London, July 12.—In spite of all the gloomy predictions of the Tories there appears to be no breakers ahead for the government since the opposition's attempt to make political capital out of the Marconi affair failed.

The Tories on the other side, find themselves in a hopeless position and even their own papers occasionally admit that never before has the party been so absolutely hopeless as at present, when all they can do is to protest against the measures, which they know are bound to become law, since the antiquated house of lords has been shorn of its power to kill all real democratic legislation.

In all their speeches in Parliament, the Tories came back to the abolishment of the lords' veto as the main cause of their own deplorable helplessness, and they have repeatedly tried to impress it on the minds of the voters that, by passing the Parliament Act, the Liberal government has inflicted a great blow to the freedon of the people; and, by trying to rush the home rule and the Welsh establishment bills through the house of commons in what the Tories call a most undignified manner, the government is committing the additional crime of "destroying the elementary liberties of the house."

Must Fight It Out

Athens, July 12.—It is semi-pfficially announced that the Greek Government has replied to the Russian proposal for the cessation of hostilities, that peace must be concluded on the battlefield.

The proposal was supported by Great Britain and France

WALL ST. GENERALLY LOOKS FOR SLOW IMPROVEMENT IN MARKET

Traders Are Inclined to Be Fearful of Future Developments, However--Gloom Has Not Yet Been Dissipated--European Situation Will Bear Watching

New York, July 12.—The government July crop report is always regarded with interest, and by some is looked upon as a determining factor in trade, as well as in the markets. This week's report was on the whole, good—even better than expected. It gave a decidedly better impression of corn and oats, and of wheat as a whole, showed up fairly well, although spring wheat was disappointing. Since June, however, spring wheat has probably improved Thus we are in the middle of summer with auspicious crop prospects.

Stocks have done little but "mark time." Trade is quiet, but not slowing down so much as many predicted a month ago. The stock market ignored the Pittsburgh bank failures and the falling off in steel orders of the U.S. Steel Corporation. "Sold to a standstill," some said. But this is not easily determined. Now elements of a disturbing character—a railroad strike, for instance—would doubtless cause plenty of stocks to come on to the market. There is no such thing as an absolutely sold out market. We see nothing but narrow trading in stocks for the present, although there is reason to expect gradual improvement. Buy stocks only on sharp drives, and take moderate profits.

CONFLICT MAY RESULT.

Hastings, Ont., July 12.—addressing the Orangemen, J. H. Burnham, M.P., said the Pope had thrown down the gauntlet to Protestantism in his decree against modern popular liberty and that a bitter conflict must result until the question was settled.

RAILWAY STRIKE MAY BE AVERTED

House Passes Legislation With New Provisions For Arbitrotion

Special to The Times.

Washington, July 13.—Congress is endeavoring to avert the threatened railway strike, which would involve the whole continent, and tie up business. Both sides to the controversy refuse to arbitrate under the Erdman law in its present form. They take the ground that the law as at present constituted does not provide for an adequate representation of both sides to a controversy between employers and employes and so far as the present emergency is concerned the act is useless. The new law, which was introduced yesterday in Congress, provides for proper representation of both sides.

President Wilson Takes Hand.

Announcement was made at the White House last night that President Wilson on Monday afternoon will meet the representatives of the Eastern trunk lines and representatives of the Brotherhood of Railway Operatives, who are now seriously threatening to tie up the transportation facilities of a large part of the country through a strike.

The conference at the White House has been arranged as the result of a joint request by the railroads and the union employes. Its chief purpose is to represent to President Wilson the urgent necessity of the adoption by congress of an amendment to the Erdman act which will open a way for the settlement by arbitration or mediation of the differences which now threaten a disastrous strike.

While this is the prime purpose of the conference, it is realized here that it may have other important immediate results. At least it will focus the attention of congress and the country upon the present necessity for legislation in such away as to insure prompt action.

The meeting at the White House was arranged through the agency of Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson. Both sides to the present controversy sought the good offices of Mr. Wilson and he immediately arranged with the president for the meeting.

DIVORCED AT AGE OF EIGHTY TWO

Duke Ludwig of Bavaria Divorced His Ballet Girl Wife.

Munich, Bavaria, July 12f—A decree of divorce was granted here today to the eighty-two year old Duke Ludwig of Bavaria, against his second morganatic wife, who when she was ballet girl at the Bavarian court opera was known as Antoine Barth.

The court threw the entire blame for the quarrel on the wife who admitted her fault. She is forty years younger than Duke Ludwig, to whom she had been married since 1892 after the death of his first morganatic wife who also was an actress of the name of Henrietta Mendel.

OLD LOCAL MAN MAKES SHEEPSEYES

An old man named Turver was charged at Saturday's police court, with having assaulted a young woman named Page. She was walking with her mother on Clifton street, East City. The old man said, "I'll send you to H—l" and strurk her on the face and made it bleed. The old man had threatened her many times. Her mother had married defendant. Witness, her husband and three children lived with defendant three weeks. It would seem that defendant blames witness for getting his wife to leave. Defendant, said he wanted to speak privately with his wife! He had said "Darling, I want to speak to you in private," and the daughter butted in. The old lady went into the box and corroborated her daughter's evidence, but thought the blow was an accident. Her husband is very jealous of her and follows her everywhere. Her husband told her to take her belongings and get out. She has been with her daughter for six weeks. The old man gets into terrible tempers and uses bad language. The old man has never supported her, that she goes out to work every day.

The old gentleman, when asked by the magistrate "What are you going to do?" replied "give me back my wife. I love the ground she walks on! I'm willing to take her in my arms any minute." The old man looked sheeps' eyes at his wife as she stood in the witness box. The old lady said she was willing to live again with Turver if he would behave himself.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Cool and fine with showers in some localities.

INVITES HIS EX-WIFE TO ATTEND FUNERAL

Worcester, Mass., July 12.Leaving a note to his sister, Mrs. Henry Collins, with whom he lived in Austin street, directing that $35 be given to his divorced wife with which to purchase a mourning gown and that she be asked to be chief mourner at his funeral, Ferdinand Helfenstein, 54 years old turned on the gas in his bedroom. His dead body was found yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Helfenstein obtained a divorce from her husband last January and since then he had been despondent. Helfenstein left a note for his former wife, but its contents have not been disclosed.

BOILLOT CAPTURES FRENCH AUTO RACE

Did The Distance of Five Hundred and Seventy Miles Under Eight Hours

Longeau, France, July 12.—Georges Boillott, the French automobilist and winner ol the Grand Prize at Dieppe in 1912, to-day won the Grand Prize of the Automobile Club of France over the Picardy circuit of approximately 570 miles in 7 hours, 53 minutes, 56-4-5 seconds. Jules Goux, the Frenchman who won the recent 500-mile race at Indianapolis, was second, in 7 hours, 56 minutes, 22 seconds.

The competitors circled the course 29 times. The race, apart from the speed attained, was chiefly to decide how small a quantity of fuel was necessary, the principal condition being that machines must not consume more than four gallons for each 1.0 kilometres, or about 62¼ miles.

There were 20 entries, comprising eight Frenchmen, four Britons, three Italians, three Germans and two Belgians.

12-YEAR-OLD BOY KILLS GRANDSIRE

Also Shoots Grandmother, Who Will Probably Die—Was Accidental.

Clevelaod, July 12.—Benjamin F. Hull, 65, a prosperous farmer of Dover Centre, near here, was instantly killed, and his wife was probably fatally injured, by their 12-year-old grand son, LeRoy F. Reisinger, of Elyria, yesterday. The boy was playing with a shotgun which he did not know was loaded, and pulled the trigger. The greater part of the charge of shot struck his grandfather in the head. Part of the charge took effect in Mrs Hull's right side and face, destroying the sight of one eye.

Neither of the old people saw the boy playing with the gun, and as they fell wounded the boy ran screaming to the house of a neighbor, saying his grandparents had been wounded by the explosion of some cartridges placed on the stove. Later, Sheriff Smith closely questioned young Reisinger, who finally confessed. The killing is held by the authorities to be accidental.

12 WAGON LOADS OF LIQUOR TAKEN

Tulsa, Okla., July 12.—H. A. Larson, of Denver, chief of the Indian county enforcement offices, assisted by 12 federal officers, fought for and captured 12 wagon loads of liquor on the Keystone trail, headed for Tulsa early. The caravan was in charge of 11 armed men, one of whom, a Creek Indian driver, was killed. The other 10 were arrested.

LOCAL ORANGEMEN WELL REPRESENTED

Port Hope's Orange Demonstration Was the Most Successful and Largely Attended There Ever

Saturday, the "glorious Twelfth," saw the pretty little lakeside town of Port Hope crowded a little more than to comfortable capacity by thousands of Orangemen and their friends from the surrounding counties.

Peterborough did nobly in her deputation. The first train from here to Port Hope took 940 Orangemen, and their friends and admirers of both sexes, and Armitage's band. Two more specials followed the regular, taking some 1260 more of our local Orangemen and their friends. Lakefield was also well represented. It was estimated that some 500 from that village and surrounding country attended the big Port Hope had gone to a lot of Port Hope had gane to a lot of trouble decorating their streets to receive their thousands of guests. But, alas and alack! the clerk of the weather was in bad humor and sent a steady and unrelenting downpour of rain.

Many thousands of the brethern of this district braved the heaviest downpour of the year and the Glorious Twelfth saw the monster parade on the streets of Port Hope, despite all obstacles. Thousands of umbrellas were carried by those in line and with the route lined with citizens this year's parade might be described as a procession of umbrellas passing through a wall of umbrellas on either side. And the procession was so large that it took an hour and a half to pass. It was certainly the largest parade in the history of the lakeside town.

Unfortunately the exigencies of train time compelled the local brethern to return before the patriotic and stirring speech making began. The Orangemen, when they got off the train on arrival looked none the worse for having braved the elements and not the faintest symptom of having indulged in intoxicants was visible in one single man.

THE 12TH AT HASTINGS.

A large crowd assembled in Hastings to celebrate the 12th. The rain which was welcomed by all made a walk to the park impossible, so the proceedings were wound up in front of the Lodge Room on Main street. Mr. Burnham, M.P., and Mr. Sexsmith, M.P., spoke.

Mr. Sexsmith urged Orangemen to live up to their principles.

Mr. Burnham pointed out that the Pope had tightened up the policy of the Church very greatly in recent years, and that the Catholic laymen, who were working might and main for the Church, should be an example to their Protestant brethren.

WOMAN PHILADELPHIA'S CHIEF MARKET CLERK

Philadelphia, July 12.—Miss Achsah Lippincott was appointed chief market clerk of this City at a salary of $1000 a year, after it was announced to-day that she headed the civil service eligible list with a higher average than three men competitors for the place.

The chief of the bureau of city property announced that Miss Lippincott would be assigned to make a study of market houses in other cities with a view to improving market buildings that are owned by the city of Philadelphia.

LOCAL POLICEMAN IN GALLANT RESCUE

P. C. Reid Stops Minicola's Runaway Horse and Saves Boy's Life

At 4.05 p.m. Saturday, the horse and delivery waggon of Mr. Minicola, the George street fruit dealer, were standing in front of the latter's place of business. Mr. T. Hooper's motor van passed at legal speed, when Minicola's horse took fright. It jerked loose from the strap holding it and ran north at a furious speed. Seated in the rig were two small boys. One was thrown out and the other frantically grabbed at the seat, neglecting the reins. As the steed sped northwards, at a quicker rate than that shown by a policeman after a government job, the pavements lined with the usual Saturday afternoon crowds, resounded with frantic cries of "Save the boy," "Oh stop that horse and save the boy."

Several pedestrians ran out to stop the animal, but, as its iron shod hoofs resounded to the beat of a galloping steed, they figuratively speaking, got "cold feet" and quit! However, at the corner of Brock street stood P.C. Reid. As the flying quadruped neared him, he stood in the centre of George street, and as the horse passed him, made a quick grab for the bridle which he caught. The officer, most evidently risked his limbs if not his life in stopping the horse, and incidentally saping the boy. It took three or four men to get the horse under control and quieted.

Civilians Massacred.

Salonki, July 12.—The Greek troops have fully occupied the town of Seres, recently in the hands of the Bulgarians, and martial law has been proclaimed there.

The number of Greek residents massacred by the Bulgarians before they left Seres was 200, including most of the prominent citizens. During the Bulgarian evacuation seventy Greeks, who had been imprisoned, escaped in the confusion.

The Bulgarians killed twenty-two notable men at Seres, and it is reported that a bishop and thirty prominent men of Doiran, taken by the Bulgarians never reached Seres. It is believed that they were executed on the way to that town.

Bulgarians Started.

London, July 12.—The Servian Minister at London has submitted to the British Foreign Office a photographic reproduction of a document found on the body of a Bulgarian official, which it is alleged, proves that the Bulgarians began the hostilities. The document contains instructions to commence surprise operations against the Greeks and the Servians.

DUMP 100,000 LBS. TEA

Washington, July 12.—One hundred thousand pounds of tea, valued at $20,000, will be thrown into the Hudson river or burned, unless it is exported by Carter, Macy & Co., of New York, by noon Saturday. The tea, which has been the subject of considerable litigation, was rejected by the Customs officers because it was said not to conform to the standards adopted by the treasury department.

RIVAL FACTIONS MEET AT BELFAST IN FISTIC FIGHT

Several Injured in Riot Following Twelfth of July Parade in Orange Centre

Belfast, Ireland, July 12.—Somewhat serious rioting occurred here early this morning at the opening of the celebration of the "Twelfth," the July festival of the Orangemen, in the course of which many windows were broken and a number of policemen and civilians were injured that they had to be taken to the hospital.

Rival factions of Nationalists and Unionists first fought each other furiously, and then when a body of police appeared to separate them joined forces and attacked the policemen.

The fight raged along the streets for over an hour and a half. Sticks were freely used by the civilians, who also threw showers of stones, which were accompanied by an occasional revolver shot. The policemen drew their clubs and charged, and hand-to hand fighting went on till about five o'clock, when the crowds dispersed. Only one arrest was made.

PIERRE PUT ONE OVER FRENCH SAILORS DOWN AT MONTREAL

Joseph Pierrie Gets Money by False Pretences and Plays a Practical Joke

Montreal, July 12.—The maddest bunch of men in Montreal are the sailors of the French cruiser Descartes, which is now visiting the city.

Joseph Pierre is the cause of all the trouble, for he is alleged to have pulled off one of the slickest games at their expense that have been tried here in a long time. In addition he raised the wrath of the William Davies Co., the provision packers, to a dangerous point.

Last night Pierre is said to have visited the warship and informed the marines that he could get them shoes at a greatly reduced figure from a French manufacturer. His tale was so plausible that he gathered in $20 to do the buying with. Then he decamped for a gay night elsewhere.

This morning he called at the office of the Davies firm. There he is alleged to have said he was the purchasing agent of the cruiser and he gave an order for 40 carcasses of beef and 15 live cattle, 800 pairs of chickens, 25 living sheep and 25 carcasses of mutton. 25 living hogs and some other goods. Just about that time the detectives got after Pierre and landed him in court. He will be up on Monday.

HELD UP TWICE BY SAME MAN

Kansas City, Mo., July 11.—William Demetress, while searching early today for a man who robbed him of $19 yesterday afternoon was held up at the same place where the robbery took place yesterday, by the same man. A watch valued at $10 was taken from him.

"You're the man who robbed me before," said Demetress.

BABY SHOT BY 11-YEAR OLD UNCLE

Fatally Wounded Melrose Infant Lives 6½ Hours, Surprising to Doctors.

Boston, July 12.—A seven-months' old child amazed the physicians at the Melrose Hospital yesterday by living for six and a half hours after a bullet had entered his right eye, passed through his brain and come out at the back of his head. The baby, Norman H. LeFave, son of Mr. and Mrs. Winfield LeFave of 22 Waverley place, Melrose, was accidentally shot about 1 o'clock in the afternoon by his 11-year-old uncle, Burness E. LeFave and though such injuries invariably cause instant death, he lived until 7.30 last night.

The child was shot at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The bullet entered his right eye, passed through the brain and imbedded itself in the ceiling of the room. The child was rushed to the hospital, where death was declared to be a matter of minutes only. Hour after hour went by however, until at 7.30 the little one died.

The accidental shooting took place in the child's home, while the mother was attending to the household duties in an adjoining room. Little Norman had been the idol of his youthful uncle, and Burness spent hours each day entertaining the little fellow.

Remembered Revolver.

Yesterday when the baby began to cry, Burness remembered a 38-caliber revolver which he had seen in a closet while exploring the house about a week ago. At that time he had snapped the trigger three or four times, and the weapon had failed to explode. He went to the closet and secured the pistol and then exhibited it to the child.

The baby at once stopped crying and held out his hand for the new toy. Still cautious Burness pointed the revolver at the floor and snapped the trigger twice. No explosion resulted, and the lad came to the conclusion that it was perfectly safe. He extended it towards the baby and pulled the trigger again. A terrific explosion occured, and the bullet ploughed through the child's brain.

The shot brought the child's mother running from the next room, and a telephone message was sent for Dr. E. L. Marr, who ordered the baby's removal to the hospital. Burness was almost overcome, while the child's mother was prostrated at her home last night.

NEW TRIAL DENIED BECKER

New York, July 12.—Charles Becker's application for a new trial on the charge of murdering the gambler, Herman Rosenthal, was denied by Supreme Court Justice Goff to-day.

Counsel had sought to re-open the case on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

Justice Goff held that the former lieutenant had had a fair trial before him, and in a 17-page opinion denied the plea.

If relief comes to Becker now it must be through the higher courts. For months he has been in the death house at Sing Sing.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

FREE TRADE WAGES

Hours Are Cruelly Long and the Pay is Miserable

J. F. W. the regular English correspondent of the Toronto Globe, has recently had a little to say about the life of working people in free trade Britain. We quote:

"The London bakers, have scored in a dispute with the employer, over the conditions—hours and wages—of work. The conditions are admittedly disgraceful; the work is done in many cases in dirty, underground bakeries, the hours are cruelly long, sometimes a hundred a week, and the pay is miserable 24s or 25s a week. The men have now got 30s a week and a fifty-four-hour week in shops, with sixty hours in factories, where the work is lighter. They are satisfied for the time being, but their next agitation will be for the abolition of night-work and for the inclusion of the baking industry in the Trade Boards act. This is an act that was passed by the present Government in 1909 as an experiment in the prevention of sweating in a few trades, where sweating was notorious."

Make Safety Pins Safer

While the safety pin is regarded as a great device its general shape causes some little inconvenience at times by the habit it has of catching in lacey material of fine fabric and often making it necessary to tear the fabric or work over it half an hour or more, to get it out. This is especially true with pins made of gold or silver and need to fasten the lacey parts of waists.

This trouble can easily be avoided if a small pearl button is slipped over the pin before it is pushed through the fabric. The button falls against the coiled part of the pin and effectually prevents entanglement.

If desired, another button can be placed over the end of the pin after it has been pushed through the fabric and thus prevent a tangle at the other end also.

A LAND OF PROMISE

District of Patricia of Great Extent and Huge Possibilities

How many Canadians are aware of the fact that a comparatively short time ago Ontario had added to it a territory one and a fifth times that of the British Isles and nearly three quarters of that of France or Germany? A district with vaulable mineral deposits, promising well for agriculture, abounding in fish and game and possessing considerable areas of timber?

Yet all these facts are set forth in an interesting report issued by the Ontario department of mines on the District of Patricia, as that part of the old District of Keewatin added by act of parliament to Ontario is known. Its area is 146,400 square miles. It is bounded on the east and north by James and Hudson's bays, giving Ontario a seashore of over 600 miles.

The geology of the new district is somewhat similar to that of Northern Ontario and at some places conditions are almost exactly akin to those in the silver area at Cobalt. Iron ore has been found in such a quantity as to justify the hope that deposits of the metal of economic value may be found in the district, while petroleum, natural gas, gypsum and salt, it is considered, will also be found.

Though the central elevated region cannot be spoken of as generally adapted for agriculture basins, covered deposits of stratified sand and clay occur while the climatic conditions are not by any means prohibitory to the general cultivation of suitably situated tracts.

Fish of various kinds are plentiful while game and furbearing animals though not so plentiful as they once were, are still fairly abundant through the district. The region has great undeveloped waterpowers, which are situated generally inland. The Albany river at high water could be navigated by powerful steamers for about 250 miles from its mouth.

MILLIONS OF CASH COMING TO CANADA

The Canadian Pacific Railway is Bringing in $60,000,000 in Eight Months

The Monetary Times draws attention to the interesting fact that within the next eight months the Canadian Pacific Railway can bring no less than $60,000,000 of new capital from abroad for use in this country. This sum is that portion of the amount realized on the company's recent stock issue, which will be available for transfer to Canada. It will be poured into the company's coffers in London in four instalments, which are due this month and in June, August and October. This means that this one railway may bring $15,000,000 across the Atlantic every two months until the autumn.

In Western Accounts

On reaching Canada these funds will figure in the company's accounts at Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, and from these temporary resting places be scattered far and wide over the country. "Much of the money will go in the ordinary course to settle the claims of the contractors who are engaged on the company's works." In this way these contractors' obligations to their own banks will be lessened, the money will be widely distributed in the settlement of commercial accounts, and the tendency will be to ease the financial situation at least to a moderate extent.

Perhaps never before has a single stock market transaction rendered such a huge sum of money available for this country, and it is remarked that the arrival of such a large amount in a period of stringency might work harm by causing merchants and speculators to abandon their present cautious and conservative attitude which is the salvation of the situation. What is required for a complete cure is a continuation for some time yet of the present abstention from speculation and from excessive borrowing. Bankers are advising men to go slowly and carefully, to keep their lines of credit well within control, and to postpone unnecessary extensions of plant or of business octivity.

No Depression

Commercial payments may be slow for the time being and real estate values may be weaker in the West, but our factories are overladen with orders and no signs of depression are descried. If speculation is checked and if business men and manufacturers are postponing new extensions it is because of a world-wide condition—a temporary shortage of money to finance an unprecedented universal prosperity together with a costly war and rapidly growing European armaments. Once Canadian corporations and municipalities can again draw money freely from London as the Canadian Pacific Railway has done monetary conditions will become easy again here and elsewhere. And the money must be forthcoming to house and provide for the immigrants who are arriving this year in larger numbers than ever. Tens of thousands of them are going on the land and the larger proportion the better.

STORING FIELD ROOTS

How to Ventilate Cellars—Method of Pitting Outside

The principle of ventilating the root cellar is the same as that required to cause a draught in the stove. There should be shafts made down outside the wall to enter at the level of the floor below, with large openings directly through the roof. The outside doors and windows should be kept open every day until there is danger of frost. To keep out the frost have the root cellar at least two-thirds below the surface of the earth. Then about December 25 it may be necessary to bank up the root with stable manure.

Where there is no root cellar, or insufficient room, roots may be pitted successfully. Select a high, dry spot convenient to the buildings. Mark out a pit the required length and about five feet wide, and excavate two or three feet deep, but if there is danger of water, excavate only three or four inches. The earth should be laid along the sides for covering. Build the roots up to a point three or four feet high, then cover with straw about four inches and with earth about eight inches. This covering may be sufficient until about the middle of November. Then cover with four to six inches of stable manure and 12 inches of earth. To make provision against excessive frost it is advisable to cover the pit the last of December with long stable manure. To ventilate the pit, take two boards one inch by six inches and eight feet long, nail good strong strips of wood crosswise up three feet, the other five feet to be boarded solid, leaving the top open until severe frost comes. Then put a bunch of straw in to keep the frost out. These shafts should be eight or ten feet apart along the pit, the slat work to extend through the roots to the bottom of the pit. It is desirable to keep an even temperature in the pit. To ascertain the temperature an extra shaft may be put in to allow a thermometer to be raised and lowered, and temperature noted, as heat and frost have to be guarded against.

The greatest success in growing roots will be obtained when the following are observed: Systematic rotation of crops; roots to follow a fresh clover sod; manure once in the rotation; thorough cultivation in preparation for the crop, and after the roots are sown.—John Fixter, Ottawa.

Canada's Sealing Profits

The United States sealing steamer "Homer" returned to San Francisco with 3,764 sealskins taken from the Pribyloff Island Rookeries. Under the terms of the sealing treaty enacted between the United States, Canada, Russia and Japan, fifteen per cent of the value of the sealskins taken from the island rookeries in Behring Sea goes to the Canadian government. The value of Canada's share in the Homer's cargo per skin would be about $23,870.

Nobody ever hears anything about the husband of Mrs. Emmaline Pankhurst, but as she spends most of her time in jail, we judge that the life of her lord and master is a very restful one.

We accept as true the statement that they never throw ladies' shoes at a bride in Lindsay. If they did, many brides would be killed, for the Lindsay lady's shoe is a heavy and dangerous missile.

This month the banks of New York will pay out $266,000,000 for annual, semi-annual and quarterly dividends. The announcement is interesting, but we have a strong and depressing suspicion that none of the lucre is going to come our way.

MONEY CHEAPER IN CANADA THAN IN THE STATES.

Liberals used to declare that if we had reciprocity American bankers would come across the line and lend us money cheaper. Of course this was a fiction. The American settlers flocking in say, with one accord, that money is cheaper here than in the rural parts of the States from which they hail. If Canada has carried the land boom to extremes, so have our American friends. Many bond issues of American cities of the first rank have had to be withwithdrawn. Even Cook county, Illinois, in which Chicago is situated, failed to get rid of an issue of 4½ per cent. and state bonds can only be sold at a greatly increased rate of interest.

It is plain that reciprocity would not cheapen money to the extent of a brass farthing, but might cheapen it in the neighboring states if the farmers there could negotiate with the Canadian loan companies, or if their merchants could obtain advances from the Canadian banks. At the present moment farmers in Dakota and Minnesota are paying from 15 to 20 per cent for well secured loans, while hundreds upon hundreds of them are told by the local banks that they must wait until daylight appears.

Are You Droopy, Tired, Worn Out ?

HERE IS GOOD ADVICE TO ALL WHO FEEL AS IF THEIR VIGOR AND LIFE ALL OOZED AWAY.

This Condition Can be Quickly Cured by a Good Cleansing Medicine.

Your experience is probably somewhat similar to that described by Mr. J. T. Fleming in the following letter from his home in Lebanon: "I think I must have the most sluggish sort of a liver. In the morning my mouth was bitter, and that foul, soft feeling that tells you, "No breakfast needed here this morning.' A cup of coffee would sort of brace me up, but in two hours I was disposed to quit work, all energy having oozed out of me. Supper was my only good meal, but I guess I didn't digest very well, for I dreamt to beat the band. A friend of mine put me wise to Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I think they must have taken hold of my liver, perhaps my stomach, too, because at the very start they made things go right. Look at me now—not sleepy in the daytime, but hustling for the mighty dollar and getting fun out of life every minute. That's what Dr. Hamilton's Pills have done for me—they rebuilt and rejuvenated my entire system."

To keep free from headaches, to feel young and bright, to enjoy your meals, to sleep sound and look your best, nothing can help like Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, five for $1.00 at all druggists and storekeepers or postpaid from The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

HASTINGS AND THE 12TH.

Editor Morning Times.

Dear Sir and Brother,—I promised to write you a few lines on how things wint off at the noble village of Hastings on July 12th. Well, begob they wint off all O.K.—an a large portion of that day's population was entirely off. The "civic pride" of Hastings the follerin' day, when I and awl betake thimselves to church, would be grate. The two pints of the pendulum is the pen and the bar. The ideels is not the same, but I strongly suspict a man who kapes good or sober awl the time. (That lakes room for me to raise the divil whin I want to). The wimmen and the Catholics ware sober entirely, which proves they are not fit to vote. I have always mintained that. The Indians evaded the law by getting drunk as the poodle dog of an old fiddler we ust to have in Hastings, which like the bees and the pigs, got drunk whenever he had the chance. Mind you, Mr. Editor, I have nothing to say agin the hotel keepers or the seventeen bartenders they kept perfectly sober; and don't run away with the idee that it was only the wake ones that wint off. Sure some of thim were the best bone, brains, bron and sinew in the district. It was the whiskey that got drunk. It was just thim boys that was out for a time and who didn't give a cuss who seen thim. Now, there it is. That is all there is in it—they didn't give a cuss and that's the root of the whole quistion—temperance and whiskey both. "But holy sailor, wasn't the good stuff goin' in me nativ burg," says I, about 6 o'clock; where's it all comin' from, and a rumor spread like firewater, that the citizens had been compelled to draw on Campbellford's supply. Now, Ihave no gridge agin Campbellford, but from what I saw of it, I belave their whiskey's bad. Hastings has fine churches. They were shut. They're only to be used on Sunday. The bars is open six days in the week, so it is 6 to 1 in favor of the bars. They win. It rained heavily here, thank God, and drove the people to shilter in the hotels, and the boys who fell in the mud spoilt their clothes. The Orangemen were as mad as the divil the way things was goin' in the town, but what cud ye do. Whiskey, whiskey and the noble town looked like the battle of Abraham's Plains whin the day was over, although there was no fightin' They had no time for that, whin you're goin' out to get drunk before 3 o'clock, and there is a big crowd at the bars, ye've got to look out or ye'll miss yer thurn. We are a noble people, entirely.

Yours truly.

BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ITS HISTORY

A Glance at the Coast Province Since Captain Vancouver's Visit in 1782

Captain Vancouver was really the first man to bring the present British Columbia before the world. In 178 he sailed along the Pacific coast and made an extensive and important geographical survey. Then, in 179 Alexander Mackenzie and a party of fur traders belonging to the Northwest Company, which became such a bitter rival of the Hudson's Bay Company, reached the Pacific Ocean after a long journey overland through the mountains. For twenty-eight years the Northwest fur traders and the Hudson's Bay Company competed bitterly with each other, and then amalgamated, establishing a series of Hudson's Bay posts throughout the territory now owned by the Province. At that time the only product of "New Caledonia," as the mountainous section was then called, was furs. All the while the Hudson's Bay Company held New Caledonia under lease from the British Government, and in 1849 largely as a result of the efforts of the company, Vancouver Island was proclaimed a British colony, although the influx of white settlers had been very slow.

Found Gold

One day, in the year 1858, gold was discovered on the mainland, and proved to be the lodestone which first attracted close attention to British Columbia. Thousands of treasure hunters and settlers rushed in from the southern portions of the Pacific coast, and very soon important changes were made in the national status of old New Caledonia. The territory was created a Crown colony, with responsible government, and called British Columbia. Laws were enacted and enforced in accordance with British precedent; roads and trails were madt to the various "diggings"; civic, educational and religious institutions were estableshed, and British Columbia changed in the eyes of the world from a vast hyperborean willerness inhabited by wild beasts and savage men to a veritable army of sturdy pilgrims from all parts of the world. Thus, British Columbia's present premier industry—that of mining—was started, and with it the first big step towards developing the natural resources of the Province. At this time the population of British Columbia numbered slightly over ten thousand. In 1866 the colony of Vancouver Island was united with British Columbia, and five years later the entire Province became a part of the Dominion of Canada.

Real Development Begins

The actual development of British Columbia did not begin, however, until the Canadian Pacific Railway reached Vancouver, in 1887, hardly more than a quarter of a century ago. The importance of this medium of transportation to British Columbia can be appreciated when it is known that more has been done in the Province during the past twenty-five years than was done in all the time previous, at least as far back as history records the business affairs of the Province. With the coming of a railway connecting it with the eastern districts of Canada, British Columbia assumed a new character, a sort of identity. The growth of population and the expansion of various industries have resolved British Columbia into three large divisions, which, naturally enough, are described according to the physical formation of the country. First, there is the coast district, including the islands adjacent to the coast; secondly, the great interior plateau, flanked by mountains on the east and west, and forming the southern half of the interior, separated from the plateau by cross-chains of mountains from whence spring the headwaters of the Peace River. This northern part is being opened up by the Grand Trunk Pacific, and is now becoming known as "New British Columbia." Altogether in these three divisions, comprising the entire area of British Columbia, there are some 395,000 square miles. Agriculture was not considered for many years, and even to-day the agricultural resources of British Columbia are not being utilized as they should and yet will be.

CANADA

The most stupendous, perhaps, momentous fact in the world to-day is the magic word "Canada." I say "magic" deliberately. Where, in the current history of nations are the gates, standing open wide, receiving millions of human beings as partners to its wealth and opportunity? To the south is the greatest commonwealth of Democracy in the world. The United States has demonstrated the science and nation-making power of human transplantation. But, great as she is, she has ceased to act as a magnet to the over-peopled countries of the Old World. She has entered upon a period of consolidation. Canada is in a stage of absorption. Australia is trying, and bravely trying, to imitate her, but she lies beyond the bounds of convenience. For every thousand men who immigrate to her bushland ten thousand prefer the rarified atmosphere of this prairie to the semi-sub-tropical warmth of Australian States. Stupendous, indeed, is the word, and the significance thereof, of "CANADA!" But Canada, to the majority of Canadians, is still but a geographical expression. It has been given to few, to see her. I wonder how many law-makers at Ottawa, for instance, have ever travelled over the Rockies? The majority, I guess, have only read about her. To the few belongs the glory of having seen her in all her varied garments, and in her changeful, alluring moods.—A. M. Nichol, Regina.

When the Emperors Met

English is said to have been the language employed at the recent interview between the German Emperor and the Czar. The Kaiser has more than once shown his preference for our tongue as a means of communication in circumstances where German cannot be employed.

At a banquet given on the occasion of his first State visit to The Hague the admiral at the head of the Dutch Navy addressed the imperial guest in French. The Kaiser replied in English, observing that he was a [illegible] admiral, and that English was the [illegible] appropriate language for seamen to employ.

SPORTING NEWS

BASEBALL.

Boston, July 12.—The teams in the "two hot cities," as he calls them, have practically no chance to win pennants in the big leagues, said Connie Mack, manager of the Athletics, here Tuesday. "A ball team in Washington or St. Louis will have to be 20 per cent. stronger than any of its rivals to finish on top," he declared. "The heat and humidity rob the players of their vitality. I caught in Washington three seasons and know. St. Louis is nearly as bad. Even when the Athletics play a brief series in these towns they leave with less life than they enter with. A team that has to play in such weather half the time suffers more, of course. In Cincinnati it's a good deal the same."

St. Louis, July 12.—Pitcher "Buck O'Brien," of the Boston Red Sox, may join the Chicago White Sox here before the present series closes, Manager Callahan announced. Callahan counts on Ed. Walsh to teach the young twirler something more about the spitball—O'Brien's chief stock in trade.

Chicago, July 12.—President Chivington, of the American Association has left here, after a hasty conference with Ban Johnson, that resulted, it is said, in determining the line of action against the new Federal League. The outlaw circuit is considered to have developed into a real menace to the big minor league.

It has a greater patronage in Indianapolis and has just invaded Kansas City, Toledo, Milwaukee and Louisville capitalists are clamoring for franchises. The taking of Secretary Lloyd Rickart from the Browns, the signing of several A. A. players, and also the bare fact that the new league is making money are additional causes of concern.

MOTOR BOAT.

Huntington, N.Y., July 12.—J. Stuart Blackton's newest high-speed motor boat, the Speed Demon Reliance, won easily to-day in the first elimination race to select a defender for the Harmsworth international trophy, as Commodore Blackton's other new boat, the American of the Viper sea-sled type, and the Peter Pan V., owned by Jas. Simpson, both cracked their cylinders and had to retire.

The Speed Damon Reliance broke no records, but she covered the 30 mile course in 50 minutes, 43 seconds which is at the mean speed of 35.491 knots, or 40.813 statute miles. Her best two rounds of five miles each were done in 7 minutes, 58 seconds, which is at the rate of 37.65 knots. Her other four rounds were done in 8 minutes, 5 seconds, 8 minutes 25 seconds and 10 minutes, 13 seconds. She broke a gasoline pipe in the last round.

BICYCLE.

Newark, N.J. July 8.—Acting Mayor Donnelly of this city last night forbid a motor-paced bicycle race at the stadium Motordrome, holding that such an event would involve a violation of an ordinance prohibiting motorcycle racing, passed after the accident at Motordrome last July, which resulted in the loss of eight lives.

RING.

Duluth, Minn., July 12.—After wrestling an hour and fifty minutes, Walter Miller, the Duluth middleweight, Monday fell unconscious to the floor of the ring in his match with Joe Carr of Minneapolis. The contest was called a draw.

Willie Ritchie, lightweight champion of the world, has proved his right to hold that title. He can no longer be called an accidental "champion" or a "lemon champion." He's the real thing.

There was some doubt, especially in the East, about Ritchie as a champion. His record is a short one, and not especially startling. Ritchie was Packey McFarland's sparring partner when Wolgast, matched with Freddie Welsh in Los Angeles, had the sudden attack of appendicitis and was operated upon. Promoter McCarey wired Ritchie and asked him to fight Welsh in Wolgast's place. This was less than 24 hours before the match. Ritchie jumped on a night train and took the long ride to Los Angeles, arriving there in the morning. After a meal and a rest of a couple of hours or so he went on in the afternoon. It was a hard twenty round fight and Welsh won a close decision. Ritchie didn't do anything particularly sensational for several more months. But Wolgast made the mistake of selecting him as first victim in a come-back appearance. It was only a four round decisionless bout, but Ritchie cut the champion to pieces, had him staggering around the ring, nearly ready to drop, and although knocked down by a wild swing himself in the last flurry, won with plenty to spare. Naturally, it was said that Wolgast wasn't the old Wolgast. Ritchie came to New York and challenged Cross. Leach told him to go get a reputation, and he did it. His next important fight was with Wolgast. He beat Wolgast down gradually until the wild little man from Michigan had nothing to do but be knocked out or lose on a foul. He lost on a foul.

Ritchie was champion of the world He won the title eight months ago. That eight months he spent traveling around taking vaudeville engagements. So it was quite natural for the challenging lightweights and the public to get an idea that Ritchie was only a stage champion, who'd crack at the first hard test.

JUDGE MORGAN ON OFFENDERS

His Honor Gives His Views on How Criminal Justice Should be Admistered

"I do not believe it was ever intended that the criminal law should be vindictive. I believe it should aim to be remedial. It should protect the community, at the same time seeking to put a check on the offender, with a view to his reformation," said Judge Morgan, Toronto. "Under ordinary circumstances for comparatively trivial offences, such as shop-lifting or petty theft, a suspended sentence is more effective than a short term in jail. And, isn't it a reasonable conclusion to draw? Here is a married man with a family who has made a slip. He is sorry for the slip, and wants to start again. What is a judge to do? Send him to jail? If he has a position he loses it, and it is doubtful if he could get another. To my mind there is only one thing to do—suspend sentence. A sentence, even a short one, tends to harden such a man as I have described. It disheartens him—he feels he is branded, and in more instances than not, great damage has been done. When most men start to go down hill a good strong brake will often stop them up short. Point out to such a man which way he is heading. Show him where he is wrong, and then impress on him that the sentence will only be suspended. If he refuses to take warning and deliberately lapses—send for him and 'salt him down' properly. That is my method. I have been carrying out the plan for 27 years, and in very few instances have men or women come back to me.

When to be Severe

"Remember, though, remember I am not talking of confirmed criminals, nor of wretches who assault women and girls. Where men show me by their acts that they are determined to live the life of criminals or where they attack women and children then I believe in giving them all the law will allow. Imprisonment and the lash are none too severe for some of the cases of wanton, deliberate and vile assault which sometimes come before me. Of course the public does not always know the 'in and outs' of every case. They read the report of my sentence and think I have been too lenient. They forget that my hands are often tied, and many a man is technically wrong while being morally innocent. Every case must be judged on its own merits. Take the case of the husky young fellow who persisted in licking the police some years ago. That man served three terms in jail, but it didn't cure him. He would get drunk, and nothing would please him but to walk into some policeman and lick him. I didn't know how to deal with that man at first till I decided to try a suspended sentence. When he came before me, I put it to him this way: 'You have been punished three times and here you are again. Whiskey is your stumbling block. I'm going to give you a chance. Go and live like a man. But, remember, if you start in on your old game, I'll send for you and salt you down solid.' That man has never been before me since.

Mercy Never Wasted

Where is the sense of loading up our jails and putting people into the reeking atmosphere of prison life, when there is a chance of giving them a lift? Poor, miserable women coming before me, with babies in their arms, charged with stealing a few yards of cloth, or something else worth a few cents. Would you have me send them to jail? Not a bit of it. I tell you, mercy is never wasted. The time was when it was 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.' That is all abolished now. There was a woman, once, taken in adultery, and the scribes brought her to Christ. Did He blame her? No. He turned to her self righteous accusers, and said, 'Let him that is without sin among you cast the first stone.' And they slunk out, one by one till none of them were left, and then He said to the poor, miserable, repentant woman: 'Does no man accuse thee?' And she replied: 'None, Lord,' He said, 'Neither do I; go, and sin no more!' That picture is always in my mind when I am passing sentence, and I think it should be an object lesson in all criminal proceedings. I do not believe in sentimentality. I give every man a chance to pull up, and when I am convinced that mercy is of no avail, then I punish, and punish severely. When a man's acts are the acts of a confirmed criminal, or a vile, inhuman brute, then he should be put away where he can do no harm. But—try mercy first."

French Character

"France is hungry for spiritual food," said Mrs. Alfred Hauenstein, of Buffalo, in her address on "A New Glance at French Character" before the annual meeting of the Canadian McAll Association, Toronto. She pointed out the excellent characteristics of the French people, which include loyalty, optimism, subtlety of apprehension, clarity of vision, honesty, a great imagination, candor, and a beautiful love of home life, which is conducted in a most exemplary manner. The family life of this country has no parallel in the world for its beauty, but there is a great lack of the true spirit of religion. They have the ceremonial side, but they need the love and heart sympathy of the great brotherhood of man to counteract the spirit of materialism which is rapidly taking hold of them. She made a strong plea for women to feel this brotherhood and oneness of the world, and to act as ambassadors to convey the messages of Christianity throughout the world and to the French. The object of the association is to bring the humanitarian principles of religion to these French people.

Cost of Big Bullets

The Hadfield Steel Foundry of Sheffield was awarded a contract for five hundred twelve-inch shells for the United States navy at a price of $187 each. The contract was given to an English firm because its price was lower than that of American tenderers, who, however, were awarded contracts for 5,000 shells, at prices varying from $279 each for 12-inch to $49 and $500 each for 14-inch. Besides showing that Englishmen are still in the steel business the incident throws some light on the cost of modern war equipment. Five hundred dollars is a lot to pay for one bullet.

HUDSON BAY ROUTE GREAT POSSIBILITIES

It Will Show Within a Few Years the Great Material Wealth of the New Region

W. B. McPherson, B.Sc., Toronto, who spent several months in survey and exploration work at Hudson Bay, says in part of the Hudson Bay Route:

"There will be large and important industries opened within the next few years in Hudson Bay. For the past seventy years whalers have been visiting this territory from the Atlantic coast of the United States. Their schooners total $100,000 annually. Scotch whalers from Dundee also pay regular visits. The whalers from Hudson Bay are worth from $10,000 to $20,000 apiece. In 1886 Lieut. A. R. Gordon gives the average value of each whaling cargo from the year 1846-1875 at $46,000 and Mr. A. P. Low in 1904, using information supplied by Captain Comer, an American whaler, places the average value of a whaling cargo between 1891 and 1904 at about $35,000. It is easily seen that this industry should be valuable to Canada. These fisheries are vast and varied. Bowhead or Arctic whales are worth $14,000 a ton and an adult whale will yield 1,500 pounds of oil and bone. Then the porpoise or white whale is present at the mouths of all large rivers in thousands. These whales are about fourteen feet long and are valuable for their hide and oil. The walrus, is very common, in the northerly and westerly portions of the Bay and has a considerable commercial value. Several varieties of seal exist in great plenty. Salmon and cod swarm the waters. The salmon is so abundant and of such quality that an industry like that of British Columbia may be opened up. The Hudson Bay Company make annual shipments to Europe at present from Ungava Bay on the south side of the Strait. It is easily seen that this new route will, in the next few years, show what exists in this region of Canada to be added to our reserve of natural resources. The rocks over much of the bordering region give promise of mineral wealth. Enough exploration has been done to hold great attraction to the prospector. However, apart from the latent resources of the Bay, this new route means much to the West. At half a cent per ton a mile, it means fifteen cents saved on each bushel on the whole trip. When a crop of 60,000,000 bushels is laid down annually via the Hudson Bay Railway, the saving will be $9,000,000, which is seriously worth something to the producer. Once grain commences pouring out this way the ships will soon appear with west bound cargoes in return. On shipping cattle a saving of at least $5.00 to $6.00 per head will be effected in freight; considerable loss due to shrinkage which occurs when animals are confined on a transcontinental rail haul will be avoided, and the animals will be marketed in better condition."

THROUGH HUDSON BAY

What Two Authorities Say Regarding Ice Navigation

"Will there be navigation enough through the Hudson Bay Straits after the railway end of the route is built to justify the existence of the road?" Opinions are all that can be quoted just now. Two of the most worthy the writer could find are given herewith. Mr. G. Halcrow, retired factor of the Hudson's Bay Company at The Pas, who has resided in this district for over forty years, who lived for eight years on Hudson's Bay, and who has several times travelled through the Straits, says that navigation can be kept open through the northern passages for eight months in the year. Mr. J. P. Gordon, assistant to Engineer Armstrong of the Hudson's Bay Railway, who was with Hon. Frank Cochrane on his trip through Hudson's Bay, made the statement that, so far as ice was concerned, no trouble need be anticipated for a considerable period during the year. His party, he said, had found no ice in Hudson's Straits or on the coast of Labrador. The Straits of Belle Isle were the only places where ice had been encountered

If there is a light in one of the cabins, it is in that of the Kaiser, who sometimes spends the midnight hour at his writing-table

HELD FAMILY PEWS FOR OVER A CENTURY

Interesting Fact About St. James Cathedral, the Fourth Edifice on the Same Site

A hundred years is a long space of time in the life of a modern city. Nevertheless, there are plenty of families in Toronto which have continuously held pews in St. James' Cathedral for more than a century. The magnificent pile to-day, is not, of course, the original building, nor was the latter called a cathedral. The first Anglican church, built between the years 1803 and 1807, was constructed of wood, and was, in fact, little more than a "meeting house." But it stood on almost the same site as the present St. James' Cathedral, though, unlike that edifice, which faces north and south, it faced east and west—a location more conformable with Angilcan traditions as to the building of churches. This primitive church was opened for public worship in the year 1807, and in March of that year the pews were sold by public auction, subject to the ground rents of four dollars a year for a double, and two dollars a year for a single, pew. The sum received in pew rents for the first year appears to have amounted to about a hundred and forty-five dollars. Among the earliest pew-holders—none of whom, of course, survive—are many names held in high honor and esteem in Toronto. Some of these good old families are extinct. The members of some of them worship at other churches. But, in spite of all vicissitudes—the first church, after reconstruction, was replaced by a stone building (the first cathedral), which was destroyed by fire, as was also in its turn, its successor the second cathedral)—there are still to-day plenty of Torontonians worshipping in the present fourth church and third cathedral, called St. James, whose ancestors were among the original pew-holders in the original wooden church, and in whose families the pews have remained ever since.

WE ALL LOOK ALIKE

Impressions of Missionary Back After Many Years

Mr. Dan Crawford, who returned after twenty-three years' missionary work in Central Africa, found a great change in the dress of Londoners.

"In the old days," he said, "I could distinguish between the different sections of society by the clothes they wore. I could tell at once the mistress, her housmaid, her cook, and her scullerymaid if all these were seated together in a 'bus to-day I could not distinguish between them. I find that all are hobble-skirted, all wear the same designs in hats, and all the same show of jewellery. Perhaps, if one looked carefully into material, or the quality of the jewels, one might notice a difference. But otherwise they appear to me exactly the same. This applies as well to the modern young man, the shop assistant, the clerk, the office boy, and the young peer. Twenty years ago the clerk could easily be recognised by his modest and sober attire. The office boy was distinct with his abnormally high collar, which added a touch of polish to his rather shabby clothes. I do not know if this is the result of a tendency on the part of tailors to standardise the clothes or of a reduction in prices, or of there being more money to spend among young men of the middle and lower classes."

HEARTS THAT SPEAK WITH GOLDEN VOICES

So much of our lives is, and must be, made up of failures that it will not do to be mistaken as to how others will treat us with regard to them. Will people sympathise with us and help us, or will they be rather pleased, and, perhaps, even go out of their way to make things worse?

There was a tragedy in one of the papers the other day. An inquest was held upon a man who had committed suicide, and it was discovered that he had been worried out of his mind by a small debt he had contracted. An old friend of his turned up at the inquest.

"I never knew he was in such trouble," he stated. "I guessed something was worrying him, but he never told me what it was. I would have lent him the money if I had known."

"Perhaps he thought he had no security to offer?" suggested the coroner.

"His word would have been good enough for me," declared the witness.

"The deceased man, unfortunately," said the coroner to the jury, "appears to have been too proud to acquaint anyone with the fact he had failed in business, or too doubtful of the willingness of others to help him."

The millions of money given in charity each year—the sums sent to a police magistrate when a pitiful case is reported in the newspapers—show that there are thousands of hands ready to go to their pockets to help.—The Penny Magazine.

Defence of Rowdyism

Speaking for two men charged at Wexford Sessions with damaging laborers' cottages, Mr. T. B. Moffatt, solicitor, said that when he was at Trinity College, the young men there did things which would put the defendants' action in the shade. He told of an encounter with the police, when the students captured a sergeant and put him up a tree in the college grounds. Captain Crosbie, R.M., said those tricks were performed on people who could afford it, but the defendants had injured poor people's houses.

HOW DO THEY KNOW?

The birds know when old King Winter is about to relax his grip on the country. They also know when the summer is on the wane and it is time to fly off to the sunny South. But how do they know?

We—poor slaves of calendars and time tables and such man-made schedules—we look at the almanac and count days, and then we say that at such or such a time it will be spring, or fall or summer, or winter. With us it is a mathematical problem. Without our tables in which are put down the experiences of men we wouldn't know as much about it as the bird does. But again we ask how does the bird know?

BIG SWEDE WEDS SQUAW PRISONER

Cupid Turned a Jail Sentence Into Honeymoon in a Western Town

Mary Crosby, an Indian girl, was arrested for vagrancy at Prince Rupert, B. C., and sentenced to six months in jail at Westminster. On the day following her sentence a big Swede called at the lock-up and wanted to marry the girl. After some pleading the caller was taken to the cell by the chief of police, and after shaking hands, he bluntly asked Mary for her hand.

The squaw looked the visitor over, and after a few minutes' thought, and shyly looking towards the floor, said softly: "Well,—it might be best," a truly discreet maidenly reply.

In court next day, Mary's counsel asked if a marriage would not serve the ends of justice. The court room was well filled and Mary was there smiling.

Victor Oga, the Swede, who had edged his chair close to where she was sitting, kept twirling his hat, and gazing thoughtfully at Judge Young.

"Are you the man?" asked the court.

"Yes, sir! I'll marry her."

So court was adjourned for an hour and the happy couple, with a constable, hied them to the Methodist parsonage, where the knot was tied.

After the wedding the bridal party re-entered court and it was not long till the legal point involving the six months' sentence was settled.

"Well," remarked Judge Young, addressing the bride, "seeing that you have just entered into the holy state of matrimony I suppose the most decent thing for me to do is make you a wedding present by permitting you to go on suspended sentence. Now you have a chance to live a good honest life."

So instead of going to Westminster jail Mary went with her big Swede lover to a shack on the Skeena.

GETTING EVEN

Nothing of so' Rank a Growth as the Avenging Habit

Are you one of the girls who believe in getting even? If you are, you have started life on the wrong track for happiness and popularity.

There is a happy mean between a football made to be kicked and a boomerang, which kicks back. A girl is not expected to meekly swallow offensiveness; neither is she to run around hunting offense and return it full measure.

If only for the sweetening effect on her disposition a girl should not let herself acquire the habit of getting even. Those "coals of fire" may be overdone, but are not half so apt to be as "an eye for an eye" life motto. The first may earn you the name of an easy mark, but that is better than a loss of friends.

It is amusing to watch the girl who gets back at you. She thinks she does it on the sly, but her methods are not hard to spot.

This is the girl who, if another girl happens to leave her out of a party, does not rest easy until she, too, can give a similar affair and omit the offender.

The girl who gets even with you arranges her tables at cards by the way she is arranged. The hostess who has placed her with those not considered in her class is promptly put with the undesirables at the girl's next card party.

The girl who gets even with you has a favorite expression, "I'll show them!" She thinks it is self-respect, when it is only petty spite. There are few slights so heinous one cannot afford to let them go unavenged. If you want to "show them," do it by showing yourself too dignified to resent bad manners in others.

It does not pay to get even, if only because it sours the girl herself. Nothing is so rank a growth as the avenging habit; it is a horrid weed of manners that soon chokes good breeding and kindly feeling.

The girl who is always on the alert for snubs is rarely disappointed. Her suspicious attitude is as unpleasant as her attempts at punishment, and soon she finds herself let alone. There are too many agreeable girls to bother with a resentful one.

Newspapers and Children

Some one has asked the question:—"Shall we allow our boys and girls to read the newspapers?" Of course, we all know why such a question is asked. There is much in our daily paper we wish might be eliminated, the murder trials, divorce proceedings crimes without number in all their revolting aspects, and what Lowell calls the "stagnant goose ponds of village gossip." But, since fathers and mothers read the daily paper, they cannot consistently prohibit their children from doing the same. In its way, the newspaper is a great educator. It brings us each day in touch with the whole world. Its recapitulation of current events is timely and helpful. The newspaper is a necessity. We could not spare it from our table, in spite of its faults. There are newspapers and newspapers. It is for each parent to bring into his home as clean a sheet as he can, knowing that the innocent eyes of his little children will scan its pages.—Suburban Life.

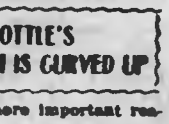
CHINA MAY ATTRACT OUR WESTERN FLOUR

Another Reason Why Our Wheat Should be Milled in Canadian Mills

Men who have spent from ten to twenty-five years in the Orient are now saying that the long-awaited awakening of China is at last at hand. The change that has taken place in the country and people since the revolution is regarded as the greatest that has ever occurred in any nation during so brief a period. Wages are increasing, and if the projected foreign loans go through, there will be further improvement in this respect. The money will be used largely in the construction of railways, and a higher standard of living will follow.

This will mean a heavy increase in the Chinese consumption of flour, much of which must be supplied by Western Canada. The grain will be ground in this country and the by-products fed to cattle here, there being comparatively little live stock in the Orient. It looks as if the development of Asiatic markets and the opening of the Panama Canal must immensely encourage agricultural and industrial expansion in the Western Canadian Provinces and furnish plenty of traffic for our railways, new and old, which link up the plains via the mountains with Vancouver, Prince Rupert and other Pacific Coast ports.

WHY A WINE BOTTLE'S BOTTOM IS CURVED UP



There is much more important reason for the dimple in the wine bottle than the usual idea of the wine purchaser who feels that the manufacturer of the wine has used such a bottle so that it will not require as much wine to fill it. The real reason is that wine cools more quickly and the temperature of the entire bottle is made more nearly equal if there is a dimple in the bottom than if there isn't one. And a scientist has discovered that what works well in cooling will have precisely the same effect in heating so that if a person desires to have a kettle or sauce pan that will heat water more quickly than is ordinarily to be obtained all that is necessary is to make a depression in the bottom as shown in the illustration. The discoverer of this fact has asserted that a quart of water may be boiled from the flame and heat of a burning newspaper if the water is placed in a covered vessel with an indented bottom.

A RECORD LAND DEAL

Over Half a Million Acres for Colonization in British Columbia

Another of those gigantic land deals for which western Canada is attaining a wide reputation was made public in the purchase of 550,000 acres of land in Northern British Columbia by Mr. Laughlin Maclean and his associates for a consideration of $2,720,000. This constitutes what is probably the largest real estate transaction ever carried through in the Pacific northwest. The land which was selected along the northern lakes and rivers was acquired from various British Columbia syndicates and six months was required to complete the deal. Of the holdings affected, 150,000 acres are in the Nation Lakes district; 100,000 on Babine Lake; 200,000 on the North Tacla Lake; and 100,000 on the Naas River. The general character of the soil is a deep black loam and probably 25 per cent. of the land is open meadow, the remainder being covered with light growths of timber and underbrush. In the work of colonization the purchasers will have the co-operation of the provincial government which has already built trunk highways through the districts and as fast as they are colonized will construct school houses and lateral highways. Babine Lake is 110 miles long and 5 miles wide and is navigable for the largest steamers.

A CHILD'S VOCABULARY

Take a paper and pencil, follow the child for several days, several weeks, putting down every new word that is uttered. And when the word "child" is used, it does not refer to a boy or girl of seven or eight, but one of three.

An investigation recently made by following a child at that age and noting every word that was used showed that it had memorized 1,771 different words. They covered practically everything with which the child came in contact, and were words the child had never heard before.

Another investigation of words used by children between 16 months and 19 months old showed that the lowest vocabulary that was reported included the use of sixty words. The highest was 282 words. From two years on the vocabulary of a child increases rapidly, until at 3 years the average child has a vocabulary of at least 1,000 words.—Answers.

THE INCENSE TREE

It is Small and Not a Bit Inclined to be Ornamental

Frankincense is a variety of gum that frequently forms a component of incense, but the term is not met with in commerce, to which incense means a gum that exudes from a tree flourishing in considerable quantities in British Somaliland and elsewhere. There is an inferior gum of this kind that grows in India and other countries of the East.

The incense tree seldom attains a height exceding fifteen feet. It presents a thorny and unsightly growth and thrives in desert regions. Dealers grade incense according to color—bright yellow, medium and dark yellow. The chief market for it seems to be Aden, whence it is taken by Somalis during the winter months.

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

—BY—

CLIVE PHILLIPPS WOLLEY

(AUTHOR OF "GOLD, GOLD IN CARIBOO," ETC.)

Supplied Exclusively in Canada by The British & Colonial Press Service, Limited.

"You must have wanted me pretty badly," he said at length, and there was no trace of anger in his voice, no protest against his attempted abduction.

"Guess I did, or I shouldn't have took you."

"What is it? A woman? You aren't married?"

Jim laughed a hard laugh.

"What is it then? You aren't drunk or a fool."

"Ain't I? That new tenderfoot, Anstruther, has broke himself up pretty badly. Miss Clifford is nursing him and wants a doctor."

"Ah!" grunted the doctor, and whistled a strange hollow whistle like that of a fog horn. It was a curious trick he had on occasions of insight. He knew the Risky Ranch pretty well, though he was no favorite there, and he knew its internal history, and could have made shrewd guesses about Miss Clifford and Jim Combe and even about Mr. Anstruther. The ways of the world are very much alike everywhere, and doctors know them better than most men.

"What is the matter with Anstruther?"

"Ribs broke, two or three, and may be something worse inside."

"Well he will get over that without my assistance or die. Does it matter?"

Jim looked at him stupidly.

"To you," the doctor added.

"No, I don't know as it does matter a whole heap. I rode that devil here in a day and a night to get you. He wasn't broke when we left," and he pointed to the weary roan. "I've lied to poor old Bill; I've stolen a horse and done my best to steal a man. I don't suppose it does matter," and he sat down on one side of the boulders whilst the hue and cry came nearer. He could see their lanterns flashing now like drunken stars along the edge of the bank not half a mile away.

"If you had told me that it was for a woman I would have come."

"But it wasn't."

"No?" hesitating questioningly on the monosyllable, "but you told Bill so. Why didn't you lie to me?"

"It wouldn't have helped. You didn't go for Bill's woman."

The doctor flinched for the first time, and opened his mouth as if to defend himself, but thought better of it, and shrugging his shoulders asked:

"Have you got all my instruments and things there? That is my bag, I think," and he pointed to the satchel strapped upon Jim's horse.

"Yes, I got them before I left."

"Very thoughtful of you. Hand them up for me to look at. I'm too stiff to get off my horse yet."

Jim obeyed, and by the faint light of a match, which Jim had to hold for him, the doctor explored the interior of his grip-sack.

"Our friend Bill got these, I imagine," he said. "He was thinking of his own case. He always is. Wrap them up in this and put them on the bank. Someone will find them and we shan't have any use for them on this trip. We don't want to carry any more than we are obliged to."

Jim struck another match and the doctor finished his examination.

"They have all the ordinary appliances for cases of accident at Rolt's, I suppose?" He was quiet now and business-like.

"I guess so."

"Well, these will do them. We shall make them all in a devil of a mess, but the water-proof case will save some of them. I'm glad you brought that, Mr. Combe."

There was a pause whilst Jim fastened the bag in its place again, the lights were growing very close now, and the voices of the [illegible] plainly audible. Combe could distinguish his own name, uttered from time to time.

"Well, what are we waiting for? Aren't you coming?"

"Back to Soda Creek?"

"No, to the Risky. Isn't that where you wanted to take me?"

"We can't. That blanked ferryman has gone and I can't break the lock."

"Is that so, and Jim Combe can't cross this bit of a river without a boat to get back to the man Miss Clifford is nursing? Shaw! Here is the way," and the dare-devil, crammed the only top hat in Cariboo more tightly on his head, spurred his beast into the edge of the grey flood that went roaring by, slipped and recovered, sitting his horse now as firmly as Combe himself might have done; slipped again, and the next moment was swimming, horse and man, deep in the angry waters of the Fraser.

CHAPTER XV.

"Well, I'm blanked! Protheroe! You infernal drunken fool, come back. Come back, I say. You'll drown, sure."

But Protheroe took no notice of Jim's frantic cry. In that roar of waters which was already about his waist, and seemed to be climbing to his ears, he could hear nothing from the shore which he had left, and if he had done so, he had sense enough to know that it would have been more dangerous to try to turn back than to go on.

Jim saw that himself, as the words left his lips, but it is the fashion of human beings in dire straits to cry for the impossible. And Jim was in a worse strait than the doctor. In the swirl at his feet there were two small objects, somewhat darker than the heaving darkness around them. They might well have been pieces of drift wood, being hustled down stream, but to Jim they would be in that dreary future in front of him, the horse he stole and the man he murdered.

And the unsteady lights of the Soda Creek lanterns were dancing along the river's course coming down stream towards him, nearer and nearer, until he could hear the voices of those who carried them in spite of the noise of the waters.

With a curse he swung himself into the saddle, and wrenching the roan's head round viciously, he galloped up stream for fifty yards, over a chaos of slippery boulders.

Then he turned his horse's head towards the river, and drove his spurs home, but though the colt's spirit was broken by bitter hard work, his instinct recoiled from this new peril, and he rose fighting and pawing the air on the very edge of the flood.

It was in vain. The man's blood was up and the ice-coated boulders gave the beast no footing. With a crash the two went into the river, the horse on its side, whilst the man, thrown clear of his mount, disappeared some feet down stream of him.

Twice the beast was turned over in the flood, and for a few moments the water swept over the man, but before either had been drifted to the level of Protheroe, Jim had regained his horse's head, and twisting the fingers of one hand in the beast's long mane, swam steadily on the down stream side of it.

Once he had his head above water, the colt swam superbly, driving against the current with all the energy of young life battling against death, so that before they had half crossed from shore to shore, Combe and his horse were level with Protheroe, and making some sort of a breakwater for him.

But it was not enough. The doctor was still in the saddle, and Combe could see the pinto's head sinking lower and lower. If the doctor stayed where he was, the horse embarrassed by his weight, must drown, and in spite of his efforts Combe could not make his voice heard in that swirl of waters. On the bank, the noise was as the indistinct roar of a mob, but in mid-stream each voice became distinct, individual and hostile.

He heard the waves roaring at him, he could feel the undercurrents pulling separately at him, he knew what they wanted, and the fury, and the number of them daunted him.

His only chance was to cling to his horse; his only hope of saving Protheroe seemed to be to let go, and if possible, drag the doctor out of his saddle.

But at the last moment Protheroe seemed to realize what was required of him, and slid out of the saddle, holding on to his horse's mane, and swimming as Jim swam.

By this time both horses had drifted below the level of the ferry, which was now crowding with men, gesticulating and apparently shouting to the two in the water, and some of the more sober among the lantern bearers having got the ferry out towards mid-stream, were endeavoring to let a rope down towards the doctor.

But it was hopeless fishing. The line was not long enough, and the casting of it inaccurate. Neither Jim nor the doctor attempted to avail themselves of it.

Side by side, stunned by the noise around them, they battled with the Fraser, whilst though the farther bank seemed to come no nearer, the red lights of Soda Creek grew more dim and distant, and the figures on the ferry more indistinct.

Luckily for the swimmers there was even less ice in the river than there had been in the morning when Combe crossed it. The frost had not held in the upper country through which flow the tributaries that supply the Fraser with its first run of ice, but there was enough of it to add to their difficulties.

Suddenly the light of Soda Creek went out altogether, and the dancing lanterns on the ferry disappeared, and at the same time a new sound struck upon their ears, a dull, grinding noise, which grew louder and more distinct with every second that passed.

They had drifted past a bend in the river, and at the next, to which they were being hurried, the ice was packing. If they got into that pack before reaching the further shore, it would be the end of them. The horses, spent already, must go under in the churning and grinding ice.

Straining his eyes to the utmost, Combe thought that he could just distinguish the line of the farther bank. It was nearer than the ice pack which he could hear in the dark below him, but was it near enough? They were being carried down stream many yards for every foot which they made in the direction of the shore. It was just one of those positions in which death is made doubly hard by the temptation to struggle against it. Death itself is probably not so very dreadful. Nature is full of bogies to coerce her wilful children, and the last bogie of all, used mainly to make us play out our innings to the end, is possibly the most gentle fraud amongst them, but that struggle in the dark against the irresistible waters, with life and safety so near at hand, was bitter to bear, and at the very climax of it Jim's horse gave in and turned its head down stream.

In a moment they were racing towards their death. After all that long stubborn fight against the stream, with the shore almost within reach, the failure of the roan's courage had ruined them. If he had been alone it is possible that Combe would have given in then and drifted down quietly to his death, rather than fight longer against the inevitable, but the sight of the other man still struggling, and obviously spent, roused him to one more effort.

It was useless to shout to the horse, but with his free hand he managed to strike it in the face, and drag its head almost under with the other, until in despair the beast turned up stream again. But it was too late. Jim knew it, for he could hear the ice teeth gnashing almost at his heels, and he only struck out still from a stubborn determination to fight to the last inch.

His reward exceeded his hopes. Since he plunged into the Fraser it had seemed to Combe that he and his horse by immense efforts had just managed to remain stationary upon a plane of sliding water which carried them towards the ice pack, but now for the first time the long lean head which had bored down upon him, pushing him always nearer and nearer to eternity, began to forge ahead. There was no doubt of it.

They had reached the eddy under the shore; the big boulders loomed up, grew clearer, and the roan struck bottom.

At the first touch Combe's knees seemed to give under him. All his strength had gone, and having gone through the depths he seemed likely enough to drown in the shallows. It was only by an immense effort of will that he braced himself sufficiently to stagger out of the eddy. He could have fallen where he landed, but a cry from the doctor found one last reserv of strength lft in his companionu serve of strength left in his companion, and calling upon that "last ounce," Jim blundered down the bank and into the water, falling against a great tooth of rock, which broke the force of the river at the bend.

By what seemed a miracle, the pinto had just made good its footing on the very last point between it and the swirl which led to the ice jamb, but the doctor was too spent to profit by his horse's good luck, and though Jim grabbed him as he was swept by, he could do no more.

For what seemed to him five of the longest minutes he had ever known, the water crushed him against that rock tooth, whilst his arm was recked with the pain of keeping his fingers crooked in that bundle of wet clothing, which swayed with the current, but which he had not strength to drag back.

He could hold on to it, he would go with it rather than let go, but he could not find the strength needed to draw it to his own place of safety.

Jim felt his body slipping away from the rock which sheltered him. Gently, insistently, like an angler who puts all the strain he dare upon a lightly-hooked fish, the waters drew him from his hold, and then there came one of those strange chuckling sounds which water makes amongst the boulders.

In his light-headed condition it was to Combe the laugh of a devil who wins, and it touched some spring in his nature, of which for the moment he had lost control, the strength came back to his muscles, and with a last desperate effort he drew Protheroe to him; dragged him somehow to the river's brim, and dropped him there, where the waters lapped over the first boulders of the dry land.

For a long pause there was silence, but for the ravings of the river, baulked of its prey, and the little wind, which wined like a wolf amongst the sage brush along the cliff's edge.

Utterly spent, the two men lay where they had fallen, as did the pinto. Only the roan stood upright, and even his strong knees were bent, his head hung, and his whole body was shaken with shivering fits.

Combe was the first to recover.

Dragging himself to his feet, he went over to the doctor's horse.

"You've got to get up, old fellow," he said, "or you'll die on our hands, and we can't spare you yet," but the poor beast lay with head stretched along the ground and took no notice of him. It had made up its mind to die.

"Can you help, Doc?" Jim asked, but the doctor shook his head, and lay still, nor was it until nearly an hour later that Combe contrived to get his companion and the two horses up to the top of the cliffs, upon which he built a roaring fire, not only for the sake of comfort, but as a sign to any whom it might concern that they had survived the river crossing.

"And now, Doc, I guess you might as well get along towards the ferry. There'll maybe be someone there still, unless they've all given us up for dead. You will have had about enough for one while, I expect."

"What! Give up the run when I've jumped the big brook? Not much, Jim."

"Then you mean coming on?"

"I started to get there, and I'm going to get there with both feet, my son, as you would say in your picturesque fashion."

Jim pulled at his pipe in silence for some time, then in a shamefaced way he said:

"I owe you an apology, Doctor."

"For abduction? Yes, I believe that there is some trivial penalty attached to that form of amusement."

"No; not a blanked bit for that. You'd have done the same only I didn't know it. It's just for not knowing you; I'm sorry. I ought to have known you were a man."

"I was drunk. Anything is good enough for a drunk."

"There ain't another man in Cariboo would have risked his life as you did, drunk or sober."

The doctor laughed.

"You did for one, and that is life anyway. Do you think that the loss of it would be such a terrible calamity? Think of it! No more whiskey—bad whiskey at that; no more graceful badinage with the coy Kate Canyon, no more delicate jests with that 'atheaded bar keeper; no more memory perhaps. If I believed that last, Jim, by heaven, I would not forgive you for pulling me out. But let's stop talking [illegible]"

"It can't be helped. I suppose that we can get some feed for the horses at Braithwaite's."

"Yes, if we start now we should be there by sun up," and lighting their pipes, the two led their horses away towards the west.

CHAPTER XVI.

After Jim Combe's departure a strange quiet fell upon the life of the ranch. There were no galloping horses about the corral; there was no noisy cowboy chaff about the barns. The one thing necessary was that Frank Anstruther should be kept quiet. Any movement caused him excruciating pain, and was likely to disarrange the imperfect bandages in which his body was swathed, and though he took his punishment with set lips, never complaining of the pain, he was a bad patient, restless under restraint, and excitable to the last degree.

It was only as long as Kitty was in the room that they could keep him still. As long as she was in his sight he would lie hour after hour without stirring, only the eyes in his white face alive, and those so followed every turn of the girl's pretty head, that they frightened her.

She began to feel that those burning eyes could see through her into her heart, and for that she was by no means ready yet.

There was a picture in it upon which she was trying to pass judgment, a picture of a furious storm in which trees were crashing and roofs lifting and solid substances were being whirled about by some invisible agency, and in the middle of it all a great red roan reared and raged.

"Them's baby tricks," she quoted under her breath, and a proud smile spread over her face as she thought of the man who drove the great red devil into the heart of the storm to do her bidding.

"I wish that I could have seen Jim start."

The voice came from the bed, and Kitty flushed guiltily as she turned towards the speaker. He did then read her very thoughts.

"Why do you say that?"

"It must have been such a grand match between Jim and the stallion. I don't think Jim has his equal as a horseman."

"That is what they say about here, but I don't suppose that he would be any good in your country."

"Why my country and not yours?" and then with a generous impulse, "Jim would be good anywhere. The better the class the more he would shine in it. Sitting a fence isn't as hard as sitting a buck jumper. Seeming is not worth anything compared to doing," and he pushed irritably at the bedclothes which encompassed him.

"Suffering is harder than either," said a quiet voice at his elbow. "Kitty, make Mr. Anstruther take this, and don't let him worry about Jim. Jim is quite able to take care of himself."

Jim's best friend was his worst advocate. It was just that ability to take care of himself which told against him with the woman he loved; just the helplessness and dependence of Anstruther which appealed to Kitty.

It almost seemed as if the quiet of the sick room had leaked through the log walls, and pervaded not only the whole ranch, but nature itself. Even the storm had quieted down after that one wild night.

As the house lay somewhat lower than the surrounding country, it was wrapped in a veil of mist, through and above which the rising fells showed, patched with thin snow, which emphasized the great distances, and the beggarliness of the November foothills.

It was the time of the year in which, to a girl like Kitty, the contrast between the sheltered life of the Old Country and the homelessness of the new would be most apparent, and as she dwelt upon this, looking hour after hour into the gloom outside, the only relief to her thoughts was the necessity for waiting upon the man who had become to her typical of England. To her, in the midst of her reverie, came Phon, the Chinese cook.

"Missy Rolt here?"

"No; isn't she with the Boss?"

"No can find her. Ole Mary come, want some clothes. Heap cold,' and the Chinaman gave a sympathetic shiver. "You go find Missy Rolt; me plenty busy cook him grub.'

Kitty looked at Anstruther. Apparently he was asleep, so humoring the cook, she went down to the library, where Rolt and his wife were sitting.

"Poor old soul; what a day for her to come," was Mary Rolt's greeting of the message.

"Just the sort of day to make one want more clothes, dear. Have you anything to give her?" asked Rolt.

"I can find something, I expect. I am rather glad that she has come, aren't you, Dick? It looks as if the trouble with her people is blowing over."

"Perhaps; but the fact that an Indian begs of you means nothing. You know what cultus potlatch means."

"A free gift, that is a fool's bargain. I know, but I think poor old Mary is grateful and really likes me."

Her husband smiled. He was not quite certain which would be the greater miracle, that anyone should not like Mary Rolt, or that an Indian should be grateful. He had known Indians for a lifetime.

After his wife had left the room on her mission of charity, taking Kitty with her to "rummage" in the old clothes box, the Boss sat for some time, smoking and thinking, and his thoughts were not cheerful ones.

A good many of his castles in the air had fallen since Anstruther's arrival, and without Jim's help he did not feel as sanguine of ultimate success on the Risky as he had done.

A sharp cry called him back from the future to the present.

"What is it," he called, opening his door.

"I dont know, dear, answered his wife from the lumber room. "It must have been Mr. Anstruther who called.

"Where is Kitty?"

"Here with me, looking out something for old Mary.

"She ought not to—"

But at this point he and his wife reached the sick room together, where Kitty was already bending over Anstruther.

"He has fainted again," she said, chafing his hands helplessly, but even as she spoke consciousness returned to him.

"I beg your pardon," he murmured, very faintly. "I give you all so much trouble, but when I tried to call you, I got another nasty one, and went off, I suppose, as usual. It seems to me I can't do anything without fainting," and he closed his eyes wearily, almost as if he were going to illustrate his last words.

"What did you want, old fellow?" asked Rolt, kindly. "We won't leave you again. It was very careless of us to do so."

Anstruther lifted his hand in deprecating fashion.

"Nonsense. I don't want so much looking after, but when Kitty was away I thought that I saw someone in that little [illegible]

CHINA CLAY INDUSTRY

Quebec Has Valuable Deposits of This Commodity

One of the newest industries being developed in the Province of Quebec is the mining and refining of kaolin or china clay, which is being carried on at St. Remi d'Amherst.

In a little valley in the Laurentian hills, surrounding Lac du Sable, after the pine timber had been cut and floated down the Maskinonge River, a settlement of habitants, mostly of the family of Tasse grubbed the stumps and settled down to win a living from the soil lying between the rocky ridges. Some fourteen years ago in digging wells near their log cabins the settlers came on a white substance at the rock level under some twelve feet of overburden. The only use they found for it was to mix it with water and whitewash their homes. Later it was found to be valuable for other purposes.

China clay is used largely in the manufacture of porcelain and chinaware. The largest use in Canada is for coating white papers. It is also used in the textile industry for sizing and bleaching calico and cotton, in the rubber industry in making high tension and ordinary electric insulators, chemical apparatus, and for refractory ware, such as crucibles and other assaying apparatus.

TO MOUNT AUTO TIRES

Screw Device Compresses Edges Till They Squeeze Into Rim

As any motorist will testify, a man should have the fingers of a blacksmith to put the average tire on a wheel. A Western man has designed the following means of mounting tires: An outer casing with a filler of yielding material sets in a beading that forces its edges together and compresses the filler. To compress these edges still farther than it would be possible to do by hand, even by a strong man, there is a small clamping device with a screw that tightens it up. In this way the loose edges of the tire can be compressed to a point where they will slide into the wheel-rim and the tire will be much firmer than it otherwise would be; or rather, a tire so firm that it could not be adjusted by hand can be put on in this manner.

Moscow Survivors.

That soldiers—once they escape the risks of war—are long lived is shown by Russia's finding four or five survivors of the Moscow campaign, the centennial of which is now being celebrated.

These veterans must be 115 years old, at least, unless small boys were enlisted in those days.

After the 20 years of war of the Napoleonic era, of the 26 marshals of France, 26 survived. Of the 10 who were gone, only two died of disease; three fell in battle, one was drowned, one was assassinated, one was a suicide and two were executed.

The survivors reached an average age of 72 years, 10 of them dying as octogenarians.

Many other generals have reached extreme old age. Marshal de Richelieu was 94 years old when he died in 1788. Two years before his death he married a girl of 16, who was able to say to Napoleon III. in 1863: "Sir, Louis XIV asked of my husband"—

She was then 92 years old and lived two years longer.

Diagnosis Wrong for Once.

"It's a dangerous thing," said the physician, "to jump at a diagnosis before getting all you can of the patients' personal history. I know a doctor who while still a young man had attained considerable repute as a specialist in nervous diseases. One day a man visited him with a tale of woe, and after listening the physician leaned back in his chair, joining his finger tips with the true professional air, and said:

"'What you need, my dear sir, is a broader vision. You have got into a rut. You ought to read more. Get the opinions of able writers on the current topics of the day. Your mind has become stagnant. It has been dulled by the petty commonplaces of your own little sphere. Read the newspapers. Get familiar with what is on in this country—in the world. By the way, may I ask what is your occupation?'

"'I'm an exchange editor,' replied the patient with a melancholy smile."—Newark [illegible]

Strengthens The Throat Assists Public Speakers

Catarrhozone is the Greatest Invention of the Age for Weak Throat, Hoarseness, &c.

Strongly Endorsed by the Clergy.

Because of its strengthening influence upon the vocal cords, Catarrhozone cannot be too highly recommended as a wonderful voice improver. It almost instantly removes huskiness or hoarseness, thus insuring clearness and brilliancy of tone. The most eminent speakers and prima donnas are seldom without Catarrhozone, and credit in no small degree their uniform strength and brilliancy of tone to its influence.

"For many years I have been a sufferer from that terrible disease known as CATARRH.

"Being a professional singer, you can readily understand that Catarrh would be a serious hindrance to my professional skill.

"One year ago I read in the "Progress" a convincing testimonial from one who had been cured of this disease through using your God-sent invention, Catarrhozone.

"Believing in the merit of Catarrhozone, I tried it.

"Catarrhozone cured me, and has been the means of my success.

"You are at liberty to use my name if it will help relieve some from suffering, and I will always remain,

"Bob Bixley, New Glasgow, N.S."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars nad testimonials.

THIS RICH YOUTH REFORMS BAD BOYS

Norris Attends the Milwaukee Juvenile Court and Nods If He Wants the Accused

Neil Wells Norris, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, with $4,000,000 has for some years been serving without pay, for the love of boys and humanity, as a volunteer probation and truancy officer, and he always attends Juvenile court to hear the stories told by the youthful culprits, having a tacit arrangement with the judge by which the judge, when Norris nods his head, paroles the boys under examination to the care of the young millionaire. One of the probation officers thus describes the millionaire's work:

"Young Mr. Norris is not only spending his time and money on boys who are paroled to him, but he is sending other boys to school. You see, there are many boys who want to go to school, but whose parents are so situated financially that they cannot be allowed to attend. Many of these boys are sent to school by Mr. Norris, who is paying their family the wages that the boy would earn." In a garage, which is probably the finest of its kind in Wisconsin, Mr. Norris has fitted up his 'bad boy office.' Here, on the second floor, is a room in which the lads report each week to the "volunteer officer." When the reports have been heard the boys are sent downstairs, where a gymnasium has been fitted up for their use. As he sat in his office above the garage Mr Norris was led to speak of the work he has been doing:

"How did I get into this work?" he asked. "Well, really, I don't know. I just sort of drifted into it. I am fond of boys and used to attend the sessions of the court, and have heard their troubles. I got the idea that maybe I could be of use, and so I just started out. The work is interesting and keeps my mind busy, and there is great possibility for good. I have learned many things. One is that the hardest thing a man who wants to help a boy has to deal with is the boy's parens. I suppose that if the home training was of the best the boy would never get into court, but it is surprising the amount of parental opposition the probation officers are forced to combat. If we could only get the cooperation of the parents the work would be comparatively easy. Another thing I have found out is this: We need some form of corporal punishment which can be administered to boys by officials of the city and state. The average boy who comes before the Juvenile court does not mind rtprimand. He thinks that it is sort of a joke to come to court and hear himself 'raked over the coals,' and then be allowed to go. If, however, we had some means of administering some sort of physical punishment I think that the boys might not come to court so often."

WONDERFUL PUMPS

Seven Million Gallons an Hour Lifted by Gas Explosions

The most wonderful feature of the waterworks in the East End, London, are the marvellous pumps, which, by means of a series of gas explosions, blow seven million gallons of water every hour from the River Lea into huge tubes, through which it rushes to the reservoir. The invention was conceived by the engineer, Mr. H. A. Humphrey. The following details of the works, which were five years under construction, show the imposing dimensions of the undertaking:—

Area of reservoir: 460 acres.
Capacity: 3,000,000,000 gallons.
Circumference: About four and a half miles.
Maximum depth: 40 feet.
Cost: Over $25,000,000.
Pumping capacity: 7,500,000 gallons an hour.
Persons who will be supplied with water: 1,600,000.

REVOLVER LORE

First One Invented Nearly Two Centuries Ago

Since the introduction of gunpowder as a propellant and the general use of firearms in warfare and hunting, there has been a more or less insistent demand for mechanisms that would give the soldier or hunter a number of shots at his command without reloading and enable them to be rapidly discharged. The first patent for a firearm of this description seems to have been issued by the British Patent Office in 1718 to James Puckle, a citizen of London, for a gun mounted upon a tripod, having a single barrel and a revolving cylinder. Strangely enough, one of the claims set forth in this patent appears almost verbatim, one hundred and thirty years later, in a patent taken out by Rollin White, an American inventor of a revolving pistol. Another curious claim of the patent was, "The mechanism permits the use of square bullets against the Turk and round bullets against Christians; moreover, so great is the rapidity of fire that ships armed with the gun cannot be boarded by any attacking force."

FRENCH CANADIANS FORCED TO MARRY

Or Forfeit Their Right to Hunt, to Till Soil, or Revisit France

Maadre Fribourg claims to prove in the Paris "Grand Revue," through the correspondence of Colbert, the great Minister of Louis XIV., that the strength and stamina of French-Canadians are largely due to that statesman. Colbert was particularly interested in Canada, and made its colonisation his hobby. He sent out batches of strong and healthy young Frenchwomen, and, in order that there should be no doubt about their getting married on their arrival, he issued a decree rendering marriage compulsory. Every bachelor-colonist was forced to take as his wife one of the female emigrants, under penalties on refusal of forfeiting his right to till the soil, to hunt, or to revisit France. Special privileges were, moreover, granted by Colbert to the parents of numerous children. It was in this way that the magnificent stock of French-Canadian voyageurs and trappers, not to speak of the equally sturdy agriculturists, was created. The question of Canadian virility was the subject of a private discussion by a number of members of the British Parliament and one of the members observed that with the exception of the ordinance respecting marriage, the same thing was practically true of the first settlers in other parts of Canada. They were drawn from the strongest of the race, and it is, of course, a commonplace to say that the present energy of Canada as a nation is the result of this endowment. Surprise is frequently expressed in England that so numerically small a nation as Canada should project and carry to a successful conclusion such huge undertakings; but is not the reason to be found in the fact that the fathers of the Dominion were the fittest of those who survived the Napoleonic and American wars, and before that date those Highlanders of whom Lord Hobart, the then Colonial Secretary, wrote in such high terms?

TRUE IN MISFORTUNE

Human nature is vilely selfish and rather enjoys the failure of other people. "Don't expect help or sympathy from others," advised a notorious millionaire. "You won't get it if you do. Keep your failures to yourself. If you tell them to other people, don't expect them to enjoy them, that's all. It's human nature, and cannot be altered." It is wonderful how many people accept that miserable view. It does not do them good. I believe it is as false a view as anyone can hold, and one which helps enormously to the failure of those who hold it. The man or woman who believes that human beings are no better than that, won't make the best of them, or of himself or herself either. "Don't expect too much, but don't expect too little of men or women," advised Lord Palmerston. "People are always running to one extreme or the other in too much or too little confidence in them. I have seen a good deal of gratitude and much ingratitude. I think I may assure you of this, that desert inevitably gathers to it some who remain true to it in every misfortune."—The Penny Magazine.

NORTH GREY GOES TO CONSERVATIVES

Yesterday's Political Battle The Fiercest Ever Held in That Riding, Rowell's Policy Swept Under

Toronto, July 14.—The hardest fight on record for membership of the Ontario Legislature for North Grey was held to-day. The Conservative candidate was Mr. C. S. Cameron and the Reform standard bearer was Mr. John McQuaker. The election was due to the retirement of Hon. A. G. Mackay. It must be remembered that Mr. MacKay had a majority of nearly 900 in this county at the last general election. Despite this, however, there had not been a great deal of confidence in the Liberal camp, and they put forth desperate efforts to prevent Mr. Rowell's slender following in the House being still further reduced. The Government was idle, and several of the Ministers and a number of private members were busy in the riding during the past week.

Despite the grandstand efforts of Mr. Proudfoot to make his charges an issue and of Mr. Rowell to carry the banner of temperance to the front the public reception of neither the charges nor "abolish the bar" carried much weight. Mr. Rowell has been preaching temperance vigorously, but John McQuaker, his candidate, has not so much faith in the vote-getting value of the "abolish the bar" slogan, and at one of his meeting during the past week entirely omitted to mention the temperance question.

Strictly party lines were drawn.

Last night despatches received in the city bear the news that the constituency of North Grey was carried by Mr. Cameron, Conservative candidate by a majority of 300.

On motion of Ald. Gordon and Buller, the application of J. H. Greer was accepted.

Ald. Duncan and His Worwhip's amendment that the matter be left with the chairman and Engineer Jeffrey for enquiry into the qualifications of the different applicants, and report, was lost.

SAYS HIS JOURNEY WITH COL. SAM LIKE COMET TRIP

General Sir Ian Hamilton Overjoyed at What He Saw of Dominion--They Make Time, Coast to Coast

Ottawa, July 14.—Having traveled nearly twelve thousand miles, reviewed one hundred and thirty units and inspected every camp, Sir Ian Hamilton, Inspector-General of Overseas forces, and Col. Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, returned to Ottawa this morning.

With the tireless Minister of Militia as his cicerone Sir Ian made the trip of inspection from Halifax to Vancouver and back again in record time, having left Ottawa on June 6. No man has ever seen as much of Canada in as short a time as General Hamilton; in fact the General himself remarked that "Traveling with Col. Hughes is like traveling with a comet."

"I was delighted with the trip," said General Hamilton. "I found the men very keen, their spirit is fine, while they were very enthusiastic. The way they kept their camps show how anxious the men were to keep up to the mark. The officers also showed particular interest in the manoeuvres and any criticism we might make.

WANT FRENCH TONGUE KEPT OUT OF PROVINCE

Toronto, July 14.—Bi-lingualism and the navy proposals formed the keynote of many strong addresses at the Twelfth of July demonstration Saturday, and the hearty response of the immense audience to the sentiment of the speakers gave a strang criterion of the spirit of the people on these two great questions of the day. A storm of approval broke from the crowd when Dr. J. W. Edwards M.P., of Frontenac, declared that the French language should stay east of the Ottawa River and strongly condemned the anti-British sentiment in Quebec.

"I have no right to make any charges against the people of the Province," he declared, "but when I hear Conservatives charging Liberals and Liberals charging Conservatives with making racial appeals, then I have the right to say that the sentiment is anti-British. There exists in Canada to-day a certain class of men who want a French Republic on the banks of the St. Lawrence River which shall be dominated by the Roman Catholic Church."

BULGARIANS LOOT, KILL, BURN AT WILL; OFFICERS LEAD IN SAVAGE BUTCHERY

Women and Girls Victims of Incredible Outrages by Soldiers, Many of Them Dying From Effects of Mishandling--Young and Old, Rich and Poor Starve or Burn to Death

Consulates are Not Spared; Banks, Schools and Churches Prey of Flames---Hospitals and Pharmacies Burned After They Had Been Pillaged, Cutting off all Sources of Relief

Salonika, July 14.—The sacking and burning of the town of Seres by the defeated Bulgarian army and the accompanying outrages on women, and atrocities on men, were fully confirmed to-day in a despatch from a well-known Greek correspondent.

The retreating Bulgarian soldiers, he telegraphs, opened a cannonade with four field guns from a hill above the town on Friday. At the same time bands of Bulgarian soldiers led by their officers scoured the streets, first, pillaging the stores and houses and then drenching them with petroleum and setting them alight, until the greater part of the town was blazing.

Foreign Consulates Not Spared.

The soldiers were accompanied by the notorious revolutionary Colnel Yankoff, who with other former officers of the Bulgarian army, was very active inMacedonia in 1903.

Even the Foreign consulates in Seres were not spared, according to the correspondent. The Austro-Hungarian consular offices were plundered and burned. Vice-Consul George C. Zlatko, being carried off by the marrauders, but being subsequently ransomed. The Italian Consulate was also sacked, but the Consul bought off the incendiaries.

The Bank of Athens, the Oriental Bank, the Palace of the Metropolitan the great Synagogue, all the schools the tobacco warehouses of the Austrian German and American companies and hospitals were burned after they had been pillaged. The American Tobacco Company alone suffered to the extent of $1,000,000.

Many People Are Crucified.

Many people were crucified, hacked to pieces or burned alive by the maddened Bulgarians, who committed incredable outrages on women of all ages, many of whom died from the effects of mis-handling.

The condition of those who escaped is lamentable. Rich merchnats are dying of hunger, while wretched mothers,trembling with cold, are trying to find covering and food for their naked and starving children.

The situation is desperate as all the pharmacies are burned down and there is a total lack of medicine for the sick and bandages for the injured.

The Greek authorities in Salonika are rushing food stuffs, clothing anh medicine to the stricken town.

Servian "Surprise" Worked.

London, July 14.—A despatch from Uskup to The Times says that the fighting which the Bulgarians maintained for several days on the north side of Egri Palanaka was terminated Friday night by a decisive Servian surprise advance, which resulted almost beyond the Servian's wildest hopes.

So complete was the surprise that under the dashing assault the Bulgarians crumbled and were chased to Patariza, where the Servians siezed a position of the greatest strategical importance, dominating and commanding a wide section of the frontier.

This capture, adds the despatch, greatly reduces the chances of a Bulgarian counter invasion unless General Demitrieff should be able to deliver a sledge hammer blow with overwhelming numbers.

PETERBORO'S LATEST COAL PLANT OPENED

Yesterday Afternoon the Big Hard Coal Warehouse of Mr. R. Hicks Was Successfully Put in Operation.

Yesterday afternoon the new big hard coal warehouse of Mr. R. Hicks at Charlotte and Bethune streets was put in operation for the first time. A full report of this, Peterborough's most modern coal handling plant, has already been given in The Times. Shortly before 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon several steel cars of hard coal were shunted up to the receiving vault of the establishment.

A few turns of a wrench and a car discharged its cargo of dusty diamonds into a subterranean cellar or receptacle. The turn of a switch, and a series of steel buckets on a steel endless chain automatically conveyed the coal some 65 feet towards heaven and dumped it into a series of shutes which led to a wooden shaft, without any obstruction. Down this big shaft the coal sank, by gravity, to the various floors and bins below. From these also by gravity, the coal will be loaded automatically into delivery waggons. A feature, possibly worth mention, is that as the coal is passed to the waggons, it passes over screens. This saves customers from facing, in the sweet subsequently, several charges for using unparliamentary language over getting an undue allowance of dust in their coal, besides saving expense to the management.

JONES RE-ELECTED AFTER CRITICISM

Medicine Hat, Alta., July 14— At Saturday's session of the Convention of the Alberta Federation, four Edmonton delegates, headed by Jos. Knight, a well known Socialist, criticized President Jones for accepting a nomination from the Liberal-Labor party at the last provincial election and charged that Secretary English was trying to work a salary out of the job. President Jones was re-elected, B. W. Bellamy, Medicine Hat was elected Secretary. On motion of Clem. Stubbs it was decided to hold the next convention at Calgary on the second Monday in October, 1914.

LEGAL COMMITTEE MET LAST NIGHT

New Agreement Re Campbell-Green Dispute

The City's Legal Committee met last night, Chairman Ald. Gordon presiding. The Mayor, Aldermen Johnston and Gillespie were also in attendance.

The Green-Campbell claim to ownership of certain property on the river front, east of Water street, (corner of Water and Charlotte streets) a portion of the original Government reserve, came up for discussion. Green-Campbell claim ownership by right of sixty-years' continuous possession, according to law, but have no title to the land.

The property in question has been valuated for the city at $500.

This land faces on Water street, on the continuation of Charlotte street, east of Water, and runs northward between the terrace east of the market square.

The city have already assumed to convey a gore of the land to the C. P.R. and purpose forcing their rights in connection with the remainder. Campbell and Green are opposing the city and offer $25 for a title to the land in dispute.

Last evening, Mr. A. E. Dixon, representing Mr. Green and Mr. Campbell, appeared before the Committee.

The Committee offered to give the claimants titles to the land for $200 a piece—$400, Mr. Green undertaking to give a quick claim to the C.P.R. of the small gore which the city has assumed to convey to the railway, and Messrs. Campbell & Green to assume all liability for any claims for damages which may accrue from the transaction.

Neither Mr. Campbell or Mr. Dixon would agree to this, although the latter thought Mr. Green might consent to pay $100. Mr. Campbell said he would not give more than $50 for a title from the city.

The matter will go to the City Solicitor for further action.

No action was taken on Ferguson's claim of $2,000 against the city for damages in losing his leg by being run over by a Grand Trunk freight car on Bethune street.

The Committee will recommend that Council has not sufficient knowledge of public opinion to pass either an affirmative or negative resolution re the proposition to increase the pay of the members of the House of Commons

ARMY OFFICERS URGED TO STAY WITH THEIR COMMANDS

Home Rule Has Stirred Up So Much Trouble Some Talked of Quitting

London, July 14.—The House of Lords to-day send the Home Rule bill one further stage towards the Unknown.

The overwhelming Unionist majority in the Lords will, following Lord Lansdowne's lead refuse to consider the Government bill until it has been submitted to the electorate, but Mr. Asquith, supported by acoalition majority of over 100 in the commons, has no apparent intention of calling a general election, until the Government's three cardinal measurement Irish Home Rule, Welsh Disestablishment and Scottish Temperance Reform finally are on the statute books, as they will be after the passage of third time through the Commons, next session.

What will happen then it is impossible yet to forecast.

Serious politicians find it very difficult to believe in the feasibility of Sir Edward Carson's plan, which is form a Provisional Government to take over the Orange counties, directing the people to pay taxes to that Provisional Government, instead of the new Irish Home Rule executive at Dublin.

Say Scheme Is Unworkable.

Practical administrators say that any such scheme is unworkable. If the Orange counties are not to be taxed and administered from Dublin, they must come under the local Government Board in London, as the English counties do.

MRS. PANKHURST CAUGHT, JAILED

London, July 14.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst and Miss Annie Kenney, two of the militant suffragettes' leaders, defied the Government of the Women's Social and Political Union.

Mrs. Pankhurst said she had come against her doctor's advice, but that if she was well enough to be tortured in prison by Reginald McKenna, the Home Secretary, she also was well enough to attend a meeting of her comrades.

Miss Kenney holding aloft two of her licenses' under the "cat and mouse act" asked for bids for them and they were sold by auction for $30 each.

Miss Kenney was arrested during an uproar caused by a clash between the police and sympathizers with the suffragettes. Mrs. Pankhurst, however, managed to evade the officers and escape.

Mrs. Pankhurst was captured later in the day by a detective, who saw her leave the place in a taxicab and pursued her in another. The two vehicles engaged in a wild race through the crowded streets, but the fugitive militant leader was at length run down and taken to jail.

SOONER REBEL THAN SLAVE.

Mrs. Pankhursthad been received with an ovation by the meeting. She leaned heavily on a table as she addressed a few sentences to the audience. She said

"I am a rebel as Sir Edward Carson is. Both of us are rebels because there is no other way open to us to redress our grievance. I would sooner be a rebel than a slave. I would rather die than submit. I mean to be a voter in the land of my birth or die. My challenge to the Government is 'Give me freedom or kill me.'"

BASEBALL

In a fast and well played game yesterday at Hamilton, the Petes defeated the Hamilton nine by the score of 5—2. There was a large turn out of the fans and the game was full of life. Belting worked on the rubber and put up a good game, while McNeal held him up behind the bat.

THE EASIEST WAY TO REMOVE FUZZ

(Boudoir Secrets.)

No longer is it necessary for women troubled with hair on face or arms to submit to the torturous electric needle, or experiment with injurious preparations, for powdered delatone, mixed with water to form a paste and spread on the hairy surface, will quickly remove every trace of hair or fuzz. After leaving the delatone on two or three minutes, it should be rubbed off and the skin washed. Not only will the hairs vanish, but the skin will be left white, soft and firm.

Eyebrows can be made to grow thick and glossy by rubbing a little pyroxin on each day. Short, straight eyelashes will come in long and have a beautiful curl if pyroxin be applied at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger. Be real careful and don't get any where no hair is wanted.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 35c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 35c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., [illegible] George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

AN IMMENSE ORCHARD

Fourteen Hundred Acres of British Columbia Fruit Farm

Among the largest individual orchards in British Columbia is that owned by J. D. Anderson, about fourteen miles from Rossland.

Here he owns 1,400 acres, which he purchased when land was cheap, from the Provincial Government. On this tract he cleared 130 acres and 120 of this was planted with 11,000 fruit threes and about 4,000 small fruits including raspberry, blackberry, currant and gooseberry bushes.

A majority of the trees are of the known popular commercial varieties which give the best results in British Columbia. For instance, he has 3,000 Jonathans, 3,000 Mackintoshes, and 2,500 Northern Spies.

Trees are planted with a surveyor's transit and a 300-foot steel tape, and from whatever angle they are looked at present symetrical appearance. A few acres are donated to potatoes and other vegetables, and more to clover which yields an immense crop.

Besides fruit, Mr. Anderson has 500 White Leghorn chickens, a number of pedigree Berkshire hogs, a large flock of ducks and five hives of bees, which number of swarms will naturally increase. Bees are a necessary part of the orchardist's plant, as they aid in fertilizing the blossoms by carrying the pollen from one tree to another.

From fifteen to twenty men are constantly employed in and about the orchard which has been carried along on the best scientific lines, and in such a manner as to make a failure almost impossible.

BECKER'S PLEA FOR NEW TRIAL DENIED

New York, July 14.—Charles Becker's application for a new trial on the charge of murdering the gambler, Herman Rosenthal, was denied by Supreme Court Justice Goff to-day.

Counsel had sought to re-open the case on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

Justice Goff held that the former lieutenant had had a fair trial before him, and in a 17-page opinion denied the plea.

If relief comes to Becker now it must be through the higher courts. For months he has been in the death house at Sing Sing.

HIS FIRST USE FOR WEALTH

For a Millionaire, Mose's Aspirations Would Seem to the Ordinary Man Singularly Modest.

E. F. Swinney, president of the First National bank of Kansas City, was born in the south, says the Saturday Evening Post. He goes back home once or twice a year and it is part of the homecoming program to have Old Mose polish his shoes. Old Mose prides himself on the fact that he has known "Mistch Eddie" since he was born—and "his daddy befo' him."

When Mr. Swinney was there recently Mose was polishing his shoes. He stopped and asked:

"Mistch Eddie, how much is a million dollahs?"

"Well, Mose," Mr. Swinney replied, "you have seen ten silver dollars, haven't you? Now, imagine ten of those stacks and you have a hundred dollars. Then ten times that and you have $1,000. Then ten times that and you have $10,000—and 100 times that and you have a million."

"Mistch Eddie," continued Mose, exceedingly troubled, "would all them silver dollahs go on that table yondah?"

"No, Mose—not if they were piled to the ceiling. What would you do if you had a million silver dollars, Mose?"

Mose stopped shining. He pondered for a minute. Then he said:

"Well, Mistch Eddie, I reckon I'd have mah cistehn cleaned out."

"A Progressive Peterborough."

EDITORIAL NOTES

This is the open season for watermelons, cold beer, prickly heat fleas and mosquitoes.

The fact that there is a Barbers' Union in Peterborough does not mean that there is to be a "cut" in prices.

Everybody should take a vacation occasionally, if only for the purpose of learning how to appreciate the comforts of home.

If the Balkan allies do not cease fighting among themselves there will be few left to enjoy the fruits of the victory over the Turk.

Somehow the announcement that there are to be hip pockets for women turns our thoughts back to the old days of the bustle, and the Grecian bend.

Some American cities have adopted a city flower. Peterborough might do likewise, on account of the fact that many of the aldermen it produces are daisies.

Absent-mindedness has been blamed for many things, but the Irishman from West Meath who went on his honeymoon and forgot his bride is awarded first prize.

Since he left the White House the Hon. Bill Taft has lost forty pounds of flesh, but from all accounts he still totes around enough avoirdupois to make him easily visible to the naked eye.

A few days ago 800 barrels of beer were dumped into the Mendota river, in Illinois, and it killed the fish. We figure it out that either the members of the finny tribe drank too much or the beer was something fierce.

Tom Lawson, the Boston millionaire, who recently spent $5000 for three English bull pups, will probably laugh derisively at the announcement that a Connecticut woman will built a $15,000 house for pedigreed cats.

THE NEW PARTY

The new party is completing its organization, and will be in evidence at the next Dominion elections. These are the men who hitherto successfully blocked anything like compulsory education, and which is prepared to fight for complete priestly control of all education. It is this section of the Roman Church which has succeeded in alienating almost every European people from that Church, and which will in the end prove its undoing even in Quebec.

DOWN ON THE FREE MASONS

The Bishop of Three Rivers, declared at a meeting that the special enemies of the Church were the Freemasons and the Jewish immigrants, and he declared that for his part he thought it "a great misfortune that we should have opened our doors to these unhappy people (the Jews) who have come to devour the substance of our race." The Bishop also declared that it had been a great mistake keeping religion out of politics. Abbe Gelinas, of Three Rivers Seminary, declared that in his opinion the assumed harmony between the French and the Anglo-Saxon in Canada, "exists only in meaningless speeches or on paper, and the races will never fuse."

A SUFFRAGETTE VICTORY.

In forty-three years, ten States have adopted woman suffrage. The list in order of time is: Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Washington, California, Arizona, Kansas, Oregon, Illinois. It has been a western movement. The suffrage leaders aver that Illinois is an eastern State. Be this geographically correct or not, the carrying of the third largest State, a commonwealth so great, rich and intelligent as Illinois, is a momentous victory. The news despatches tell us that it is expected to have a great effect upon the voters of the two Dakotas, Montana and Nevada, where the matter comes up in 1914.

In Canada the prospects for the suffragettes are not so bright.

Bright, Ruddy Cheeks For Pale Girls

NO LONGER ANY NEED TO BE PALE, WEAK OR ANAEMIC.

By Following the Advice of Miss McEwen You Can Quickly Become Strong Again.

The pallid girl always lacks appetite. What little she eats is badly digested.

At night she is restless, she dozes, but doesn't sleep soundly.

Vital force must be increased, new blood must be supplied and a general rebuilding take place before she will feel like she ought.

Dr. Hamilton has invaluable experience in these cases and found nothing so prompt in building up young women as his vegetable pills of Mandrake and Butternut.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills begin by cleansing the system and purifying the blood; they also improve digestion and render food ready for absorption. Additional nourishment is quickly supplied and the patient is fast strengthened and invigorated.

Full of spirit, ruddy and strong is the girl that assists her system by the use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

The following recent letter from Miss Etta McEwen, of Haliburton, speaks for itself:

"In using Dr. Hamilton's Pills I find my system is wonderfully built up. It is certainly the most effective remedy I ever used. I have now a good appetite, sleep more soundly, and awaken in the morning feeling quite refreshed.

"Formerly I felt tired and depressed. I looked as if a severe illness were hanging over my head.

"Nothing could give quicker results than Dr. Hamilton's Pills and I strongly advise every young woman to use them."

All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box or five boxes for $1.00, by mail from The Catarrhazone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

OUR TRADE WITH BRITAIN

Mr. Hamilton Wickes, British trade commissioner in Canada, has returned to England, and tells his countrymen that Canadians hold lack of energy and initiative responsible for the slow development of British trade in Canada. The message which Mr. Wickes bears to British manufacturers is a fairly accurate reflection of Canadian opinion. Manufacturers of the United Kingdom are quite ready to profit from increased trade with Canada, but they will never live to see the desire come true if they merely sit back and wait for the wish to germinate into practical results of its own accord.

The trade lost to Great Britain through lack of energetic efforts to develop the Canadian market cannot be estimated, and neither can Canadian consumers be charged with lack of interest in imperial preference because of that loss of trade. It is up to the manufacturers of the United Kingdom to put their wares within our reach, to advertise them to our people, and to ensure their being placed on sale at prices at least as advantageous as those quoted by the exporters of other lands. These requirements British manufacturers have not yet complied with. They have put quality into their goods, but hape not out the goods within our reach. If they want our business to come and get it.

An Aged Aertoise's Tour

At the age of 200, or thereabouts, a tortoise belonging to the Duke of Beaufort, decided to take a summer holiday. It was missed one day, from Monmouthshire, and was afterwards found at Newport, in the same county. The tortoise had walked to the outskirts of Newport—eight or nine miles—and then had been picked up and carried into the town. The age of the Duke's tortoise, says the "Daily Mail," is given "approximately" by the forest rangers, but it has hibernated under a particular rock in the forest for thirty years, and its great age is inferred from its size and weight. It is eighteen inches long, and weighs ten pounds. There is nothing unusual in such longevity; a patriarch in the "Zoo," known as Methuselah, died three years ago at the reputed age of 250. Gilbert White spoke of the tortoise's many years as "a waste of longevity." The famous old Sussex tortoise in the "Natural History of Selbourne," used to go to bed at four, and never rise till late in the morning, while it rested during and after every shower. The Wentwood tortoise must have had many rests on the way if he waited for the rain to stop during his walking tour

Between Women's Health or Suffering

The main reason why so many women suffer greatly at times is because of a run-down condition. Debility, poor circulation show in headaches, languor, nervousness and worry.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

(The Largest Sale of Any Medicine in the World)

are the safest, surest, most convenient and most economical remedy. They clear the system of poisons, purify the blood, relieve suffering and ensure such good health and strength that all the bodily organs work naturally and properly. In actions, feelings and looks, thousands of women have proved that Beecham's Pills

Women will find the directions with every box very valuable.

MEN AND COURTING

Men from the beginning of time have liked to be the hunters; women are supposed to be the quarry. It is to the quarry's interest not to wish to do any hunting, not to care, till she is certain of the hunter, whether he pursues her or not. Such an attitude is not calculating; it is merely self-respecting and self-preservative. On such cautious advance towards love some of the happiest marriages are built. No romantic girl need fear that by crushing down a baseless emotion she will inhibit the real coming of love. If love is real, it makes a progress which is resistless, however slow. On the other hand, if the romantic girl yields without restraint to baseless emotions, she not only weakens her will-power, but she may injure her pride by showing herself too ready to receive love. A man is the happier for being sure he is well loved by his wife, but when love is just beginning its growth in his heart he values the girl the more if he is shown that her response is too rare and high a thing to be accorded without strong suing on his part.—Maude Radford Warren in Woman's World.

RESTFUL BEDROOMS

Some Suggestions For Furnishing, Trimming and Decorating

Bedrooms should be furnished to give a feeling of repose; the colors should be restful. Select comfortable furniture and avoid any appearance of crowding; remembering these rules and with harmony as a watchword, success is sure to follow.

Location decides the color scheme to a great extent, a north room requiring a sunlight effect, which can best be realized by the use of pale yellow for the walls; where the light is to be subdued, a good gray-green will produce a feeling of the woods. White woodwork is desirable; it lends itself to so many modes of decoration, though fine results may be had by the use of oak, birch and other woods.

Colonial furnishings are seen at their best in the country. Nothing can quite equal a bedroom with doors and window seats of mahogany, a white trim, a cool grey-green wall and Colonial furniture. Figured papers, well chosen, are equally suited to the country house.

In furniture there are beds of wood with rattan panels, comfortable reed and willow chairs, and many other pieces of summer furniture of excellent effect, and to suit individual tastes. A comfortable chair for reading with its accompanying footstool, one for the dressing table, and a low chair for sewing and a table for books are almost indispensable.

A bedroom needs but few pictures, and in the present day so many really excellent reproductions of great pictures are to be had that a good selection is easily made, while the possession of good old prints is to be envied.

Braided rag rugs shading from cream to tan are suitable, or with soft green. Conventional designs are as easily carried out in a rug as a raffia basket. Speaking of raffia, baskets of this grass made to contain flower bowls are attractive and appropriate. A room in a country house is not complete without its bowl of flowers, and the cheerful gleam of a couple of brass candlesticks or vases will make a room as comfortable and attractive by night as it is cool and refreshing during the day.

FAT AND PNEUMONIA

Reasons Why a Cold is Dangerous For Stout Persons

Fat people and people who drink alcoholic stimulants are afraid of colds and pneumonia. There are two reasons why they should be so. First, they are more susceptible. Second, these ailments go much harder with them. When a person is fat an excess of fat is tucked away anywhere it can be; under the skin, around the heart or anywhere else to get rid of it. It isn't needed. It is a burden. When a person takes alcohol and food together, the alcohol is burned and the food is left to clog the tissues.

In case of a cold or pneumonia there is more or less strain on the vital organs. If these are cluttered up with unnecessary fat or weakened by alcohol, the chance of recovery is that much less.

No matter what the disease, the individual who eats moderately, exercises sufficiently to keep a normal weight and avoids alcohol has much the best chance to fight it off. And often this type of sane humanity goes much farther and escapes it altogether. Don't let yourself grow unnaturally fat.

Bran For Health

Severe cases of indigestion have been cured by the persistent and daily use of bran. It acts upon the liver and is a general aid to the digestion. It is inexpensive and within the reach of almost every homekeeper.

One of the most palatable ways to eat bran is as a gem. The following is a tried recipe. One-half cup or three-fourths cup of brown sugar, butter or lard the size of an egg, one cup of sour milk or water, one cup white flour, one teaspoonful baking powder, three cups of bran, one teaspoonful of baking soda, dissolved in one cup of hot water, one cupful nuts, raisins, figs—and dates if desired—cut fine; one-half teaspoonful of salt. Flavor with cinnamon. Cream butter and sugar together, add sour milk, sift white flour and baking powder, add cup of nuts and fruit, add bran, add soda dissolved in cup of hot water, salt, and cinnamon. Stir well. Put in well greased gem pans and bake in a slow oven twenty minutes.

Keeping Flannels White

When flannel has become yellow the following treatment will make it white again: Boil 4 tablespoonfuls of flour in 4 quarts of water, stirring well. Pour half of this boiling liquid over the flannel. Leave it alone until the water is cool, then rub the flannel, but use no soap. Rinse in several waters. Repeat this process with the remainder of the flour and water, heated to boiling point. Rinse thoroughly, and hang in the shade to dry.

Paint From Rocks

Millions of dollars are expected to be added to the wealth of Wisconsin as the result of experiments carried out in the mining laboratory of the University of Wisconsin on the merits of Wisconsin paint materials. Immense quantities of rock containing these materials have for centuries been lying idle in the southwestern part of Wisconsin.

A university professor produced from the same ore paint of every hue and color, from mahogany to colonial oak. All proved fast colors and every color showed a good body and lustre. The different colors were produced by a [illegible] the length of the roasting period.

CLEAN FOOD CLUBS

They Save Doctor Bills and Everyone is Eligible

Every woman in charge of a home should be the president of a family "clean-food" club. Al the members of the family might easily become members of the club, aiding her in any way she suggests or they think wise. The purpose of the clean-food club is to keep tab on the stores, dairies and other produce places from which the table is supplied.

The home keeper should know that the milk being fed to her children and other members of her household comes from a dairy where sanitation is properly considered. Perhaps she will have to enlist the services of her son or her husband or even the board of health to carry this out. Why not? It's worth while.

The home keeper should know that eggs are good; that fruit is fresh; that baker's bread, if used, is handled in a sanitary way.

The home keeper shoud be sure, in the fly season—which includes a good share of the year—that vegetables and fruit are covered or properly protected by a strong draught of air.

Numbers of diseases can be traced back, indirectly at least, to a disorder of the stomach or other organs through which food passes. If the home keeper watched her table more closely and taught her children the wisdom of eating clean wholesome food more, there would be less need of the medicine chest and the hurry call to the physician.

RED HAIRED GIRLS

Spinsters With Auburn Locks Rarely Seen in England

Though red hair of the Titian tint remains at least till middle age, a correspondent of the London Daily Mail points out that until the other day he had never seen or heard of a red haired spinster.

"I know that real red hair in girls and women is rare nowadays, and anthropological experts say that the red haired race is fast disappearing. A friend to whom I mentioned my one and only meeting with a red haired spinster told me that he had always heard that there was not a spinster to be found whose head was crowned with the real red hair." A member of the Royal Anthropological Institute said: "I am inclined to think that few if any girls with the Titian tinted hair fail to get married. Men like them and they are quickly married."

Transferring Oil Fuel

An oil tank steamer purchased for the British navy has been equipped with pumps and hose to enable it to transfer fuel to a warship at sea in any weather.

Encouraging Thrift

To encourage children to save money a German bank has installed coin in the slot machines in public places, yielding stamps, accepted at the bank for deposit.

Winged Aeroplanes

European engineers believe that, as soon as desirable, it will be possible to build aeroplanes with a wing spread of 100 feet and carrying from ten to twenty passengers.

SPORTING NEWS

TURF.

New York, July 14.—It is learned that August Belmont, chairman of the Jockey Club, who is now in Europe, has insured his horse Tracery for $150,000. He was moved to take this step after the act of a man at the Ascot Cup race in England, a few days ago, when he threw himself at Tracery and sent the horse crashing to the track when he was leading and seemed to have the rich stakes at his mercy.

BASEBALL.

Boston, July 14.—There have been many "scraps" on the ball field. "Jack" Doyle could fight, and would. Twenty years ago he had a quarrel with "Eddie" Burke, a sturdy little Celt on the New York team, and they had a fearful battle, Burke being in bed a week. Later, when Doyle was with Baltimore, John McGraw tried to steal third and was caught a block. "I thought it was a good play," snarled Doyle and the fight lasted 14 minutes.

"Cy" Seymour loved war, and had many battles, his last of any note being with "Arlie" Latham, who was aged and too small for "Cy," and was easily defeated. "Big Bill" Lange was the best natured man on earth, but when Jack O'Brien, the second baseman, cursed him one afternoon a great battle began and lasted until players and umpire interfered.

"Joe" Tinker is a great boxer and dead game. Two of his best bouts were with "Dick" Egan and Johnny Evers, both being equal in style and speed to most ring encounters. "Davy" Jones, a quick man with a light voice, is brave, and one afternoon attacked "Jim" McAleer. McAleer, who is a mighty fighter, upset Davy and then spanked him. Twenty years back, McAleer and his boss, Pat Tebeau, went to war, and McAleer trimmed "Pat" most merrily.

Boston, July 14.—Though Johnny McGraw still considers the Cubs a strong contender for the National League pennant, the Giants are increasing their lead every day. Thirteen straights were recorded Tuesday. The Giants now lead the race by five and one half games, or 73 points. Everybody realizes this margin will be hard to reduce for McGraw is now using Al Demaree, former Southern League star, to advantage, while Mathewson, Marquard and Tesreau seem as if they are fit and ready for a sizzling finish.

The Cubs may give McGraw a merry chase before the season is over, but the Giants surely know when they have a pennant sewed up. McGraw contends a railroad wreck is the only thing that can stop Connie Mack's Athletics, and, if this be true, it is going to require an earthquake to beat the Giants.

New Orleans, La., July 14.—Will the big four make the fight for the American League batting supremacy in 1913? Hundreds of fans are of the opinion that the contest for the leadership will be between Tyrus Raymond Cobb, of Detroit, and General Joseph Jackson, of the Naps, as has been the case during the past three seasons. Others believe that their teammates, Wahoo Sam Crawford and Napoleon Lajoie, battle-scarred veterans that they are, will jump to the front and gain the laurels.

Wonderful indeed has been the work of these batters since Jackson broke into the American League to become the batting-running mate of Lajoie. Since Joe has wielded his bludgeon as a Nap he and Larry have owned a combined batting average of .387 in 1910, 1911 and 1912, Jackson playing in twenty games in the 1910 campaign.

This mark is twenty points in excess of the combined batting average of Cobb and Crawford for Detroit in the same period of time.

FARMS IN ENGLAND

Few of the Very Large Holdings Have Shown a Profit

Among the farms in England ranging from 2,000 to 10,000 acres less than 5 per cent. have shown an annual profit in the last ten years. One writer in The Daily Mail goes into details in regard to a Midland farm of 2,100 acres, valued at $95,000 under the Finance Act, but which ten years ago could have been sold for three times that amount. The receipts from this farm amounted in 1912 to $6,500, and the expenditure to $110, plus that amount.

Owing to the general fall in the value of land the landlord has lost a large capital sum since he came into possession. It is calculated that in England the capital value of land fell by over $500,000,000 or $2,500,000,000 within a generation, and his due proportion of the national loss has fallen on this landlord. If put into the open market the estate would probably not fetch nearly $100,000, but if it sold at half this price the landlord would be richer than he now is by several thousand dollars a year.

One need not go into his reasons for holding, but it is clear that at present he acts as a sort of agricultural credit bank to the estate. Whatever requires capital to be done he does. When the farmers were in a bad way he reduced the rents to a minimum. In the eyes of both farmers and laborers, schoolmaster and parson, who complete the population, he is regarded as the pivot of the organization. Without his capital there would be chaos, and without his personality much less confidence, which is the moral side of credit.

E. J. CHAMBERLIN

E. J. Chamberlin, President of the Grand Trunk Railway was born in New Hampshire, and was educated in a Methodist seminary. Early in the seventies, when a mere lad, he got a job as timekeeper on the old Central of Vermont. Then he became clerk in the paymaster's office. That shabby little workroom at St. Alban's proved to be a training-school for at least two great railroad men; for at the very next desk to Chamberlin's sat a plump, keen-eyed youth who stuck to his work and never minded the clock. The young clerk's name was Charles S. Mellen, now President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and transportation czar of all New England. He became Superintendent of the Ogdensburg & Lake Champlain Railroad; and soon a still more inviting opportunity came pounding at his door. John R. Booth, wanted to build a railroad northward from Lake Champlain, to tap his immense forest preserves. It was a rough-and-ready piece of construction through almost primeval country. Chamberlin was recommended for the task. It appealed to his imagination, and he undertook it with great success. He lived at the front with his men, slept and labored out in the open. When the road was pushed on to Georgian Bay, it became the Canada Atlantic, and Chamberlin was put in as general manager. He ordered two monster locomotives that could haul a full train a mile a minute. It was not long before the Grand Trunk assimilated the Canada Atlantic. Shortly after he succeeded Hays, someone asked Chamberlin if the Canada Atlantic could haul heavy traffic. The President replied: "Well, I guess so. I built the road myself, and laid down some of the rails with my own hands!" Declining all offers to remain in the service, Chamberlin went to Mexico, and constructed railways there. He loved the adventure of pioneering, and the outdoor life appealed to him. Then when Frank Morse resigned as Vice-President and General Manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific, to go to the Alton, Mr. Hays could only see one man to finish the task of blazing the iron way out to the Pacific, and that man was Chamberlin. Chamberlin followed his old tactics, for he went to the front with the men, changed headquarters from Montreal to Winnipeg and was in the thick of things when his chief made that fateful Titanic trip. Chamberlin, like Hays, is a vivid personality. There is something about him that reminds you of his big-boned contemporary, Sir Donald Mann. Both men have the breath of the woods about them, and the look of the eye that comes from facing the sun in the great open places. Where Mann is broad and thick of chest, Chamberlin is tall, lithe, sinewy, and full of latent strength. Both Chamberlin and Mann made their first stakes in railroad construction. A remarkably unruffled person is Chamberlin, too. He always lets the other fellow do the fretting. Here is one instance of the way in which he achieves his ends:

A difficult situation had arisen, in which he was arrayed against half a dozen men. At the very height of the negotiations, he sent for his private car and announced his intention of starting off for a week's shooting in the wilds. When one of his associates asked him why he was leaving at such a critical stage, he answered: "I am going away so that the other fellows will have a chance to wear themselves out. When I come back they will be glad to come to terms."—Globe.

The Gentle Hint

Mother: "Yes, Willy."

Umbrella Device

A combination lock that encircles the handle of an umbrella and prevents it being opened by any person ignorant of the combination is the invention of a London cafe coat room attendant.

A sewing cabinet capacious enough to hold everything a seamstress may need in her work yet which folds up like a screen and can be carried by handles on one side has been invented by a Missourian.

PICTURES AND PAPER SHOULD HARMONIZE

Many Things to be Considered in the Decoration of the Walls

When considering the choice of a new wall paper the question as to what will prove the most suitable background for the pictures which are to be placed against it is often lost sight of in the anxiety of the owner to select a paper which can stand on its own merits as a decorative adjunct to the room. From the aesthetic point of view the paper should be merely of secondary importance, the claims of the picture standing paramount.

As water colors, oils, prints and photogravures all demand their own especial manner of treatment as regards their background, it is wise to hang only one type of picture in each room, relegating the oils to the dining room, the prints to the smoking room, and so on. For the background to the water colors we have Whistler's own preference of a pale yellowish brown to guide us. In the cool light shades a paper of this tone, with the addition of gold frieze, can be relied upon not to kill the delicacy of the sketches placed upon it, and if a slightly deeper shade of the same color makes its appearance in the floor covering the harmony cannot fail to bring out the merits of the pictures. In the case of the drawing room there is usually a tendency to indulge in a wall covering which is over-rich from the point of view of picture-hanging. The shiny surface of silk on brocade is not sufficiently restful for the eye, the play of light upon it acting as a means of distracting the attention from the more "matt" surface of the picture. A coarse linen, should an alternative to paper be desired, will be found far more satisfactory, especially if it be one of a perfectly simple weaving, no pattern of any kind being allowed to intrude upon its simplicity.

No Rule For Oils

In the matter of oil paintings we have necessarily to take into consideration the dominant tones of the pictures, and it is advisable to make actual trial of strips of different tones before settling final choice. Though it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule it will be generally found that deep tones in preference to tones that are either light or bright, are the most successful backgrounds for oils. The full tones of purple and the faded shades of rose that are mellow and warm without being insistent, accord admirably with such pictures in the majority of cases, and it is a safe plan to keep the painted woodwork of the room as dark as consistent with the general color scheme. The exact depth of tone in the wall covering must also depend to a great extent on the direction in which the room faces, the cold light of a northern aspect making the tone of anything placed within appear far cruder and harder than would be the case in the kinder light of a room facing south.

With etchings and engravings we have to aim at a rather rich effect in order to obviate that coldness which otherwise is apt to result.

The Leather Effect

A Japanese paper that simulates tooled leather, with here and there the enrichment of a little gold and the suggestion of a touch of rich red, the whole effect being subdued, is among the backgrounds most confidently, to be recommended. A paper of this kind makes the black tones of the engravings appear more lustrous and throws its effects of light and shade into relief. If the chairs be covered in leather and its tones can be repeated in the color of the walls the effect is likely to be good. The warm shades of terra cotta and of blue, ranging from the gray-blue down to the full, rich sapphire, give value to the depth of a good print.

Rooms in which it is intended to hang pictures of any kind should not be hung with paper in which the pattern is either large or bold; it is unfair to the pictures! The best pattern, if pattern there must be, is either a stripe of similar tone (large or small, according to the dimensions of the room), or an unobtrusive allover pattern formed by the display of a shiny surface on a dull one, the same color being preserved throughout. A wall paper which is really in itself a work of art may safely take the place of pictures of any kind, and, indeed, deserves to do so if its design and coloring are such as to satisfy our eye with what it needs for the decoration of the wall.

For Labelling Bottles

A waterproof cement for attaching paper labels to glass is made by melting together one part of resin and two parts of yellow wax and using it while warm.

When you draw threads from hemstitching, rub dry soap on the material first and the threads can be drawn more easily.

To remove the deposit from the inside of kettles, fill the kettle with water and add to it a drachm of sal-ammoniac. Let it boil for an hour, when the fur found on the metal will be dissolved, and can be easily removed. Rinse the kettle well, then boil out once or twice before using the contents.

A good way to clean patent leather shoes is to remove all the dirt and then wipe them over with a soft cloth dipped in milk. Polish with a dry cloth.

Smallest Beast of Prey.

The smallest carnivorous animal in the world is an American weasel which is numerous in northwest Canada and Alaska and is occasionally seen about the Great Lakes. Although the animal turns white in the north in winter, it does not show the black-tipped tail which characterizes an ermine pelt, and so it is not sought by trappers and fur traders. This fact, with its small size and secretive life, has made its habits very little known. It feeds on insects, which it finds alive in summer and in winter digs out of rotten logs; upon small birds, etc., but lives mainly upon mice. These it can follow into their narrowest holes and runways, for it is scarcely larger than a field mouse itself; or, striking the trail of one, it will trace all its wanderings and as soon as it catches sight of its prey it will spring after it with amazing and fatal rapidity.—Harper's Weekly.

NO CHILD REALLY BAD

No child can be really bad if he has had the right training. If the children of the world were corralled in a great field you would find them all mildness and sweetness. If they were born mean and wicked they would sting like young serpents or claw and scratch like little tigers, or bite like wolves. Instead they coo and play and howl to stretch their lungs. If a child of 5 years is a torment, if he a cruel to animals, if he is lacking in respect for older people, it is because his mother does not understand that a little discipline is a great kindness. The indulgent mother who permits her child to grow into a young lemon is respected by none—least of all by the child.

Fruit Salad

Soak half a box of gelatin in a generous pint of water, add the juice of two lemons and two cups of sugar. Bring to a boil and strain. When cold pour over two sliced oranges, two bananas, half a cup of cherries, half cup of English walnut meats as nearly whole as possible. Stand on the ice until it sets. Serve with whipped cream.

Removing Grease Spots

To remove grease from a light blue serge dampen a circle just outside the spot with turpentine and continue wetting until the center of the spot is reached. Never begin from the center of the spot or a ring will be left after the spot is out. When the place is saturated, put a piece of blotting paper under the material and another over it and press with a warm iron until the spot is gone.

Fat on Soup

When one has not time to let the fat on soup cool and harden, the skimming can be done very quickly and thoroughly with an ordinary kitchen ladle. Pass the ladle very slowly and firmly into the soup until one side of the rim is barely below the surface and the floating fat will run into it. Do not try to get it too full or the soup will run in also. By holding the ladle very firmly below the surface you can get all the fat and almost no soup.

CHEERS IN ALL TONGUES

Bennet Burleigh, the well known war correspondent, says that the Bulgarian cheer sounds very much like an English "hurrah" except that English people usually pronounce it "hurray." The Bulgarian cheer is "Oorrah," with no initial "H" and with an indefinite prolongation of the "ah." The Rustian cheer is the same. It is the Slav variety of the Teutonic "Hurrah," used not only by the English but also by the Germans, Swedes, Danes, and others. But its use is wider and more frequent in the Slav than in the Teutonic countries.

In Germany "three cheers for the Kaiser" means not three hurrahs, but three times "Hoch!" (literally "High"). In Russia or Bulgaria "three cheers for the Czar" means three times "Oorrah!" The Servian cheer is different. They usually shout "Zhivio" which is the equivalent to the French "Vive!" the Italian "Viva!" and the Hungarian "Eljen!"

SEA-GOING CAT'S DEATH

Mascot of Tunisian Deliberately Committed Suicide

Evidently tired of sea life and not caring to eke out a precarious existence ashore, "Prince," a plump, slick coated, black cat, one of the mascots of the Allan liner Tunisian, deliberately ended its ninth life by committing suicide at Montreal as the ship was leaving the wharf en route to Liverpool.

The big ship had got away from the end of the wharf several feet when Prince appeared on the main deck. He looked at the wharf, turned and scanned the deck, then quickly wheeled around again and with a feline howl leaped towards the dock and fell with a splash into the surging water.

Some longshoremen who saw the cat fall into the water tried to save it, but Prince avoided their attempts and in a few minutes was sucked under by the strong current caused by the moving ship.

SNAKE IN THE MILK

One of the Horse Hair Variety and of Obscure Origin

Madame Rosaire Lamothe, a Montreal woman, opened a bottle of milk and poured some of it into a tumbler to take a drink. To her horror she saw a small snake swimming around in the glass, and apparently looking at her. Mr. L. J. B. Leduc, city milk inspector, went to her house and took possession of the milk and the snake, which he killed. It proved to be what is commonly called a "horse hair" or "mane" snake. It was about six inches long, and had a well defined head and tail visible to the naked eye. Some of the health officers pulled off a part from the body and said its composition was like rubber. Some persons tried to revive the theory that this snake was derived from a horse hair. But as no cases of spontaneous generation are on record this is unbelievable, said medical men.

FOR THE SAKE OF HEALTH

One should not enter a sick room while perspiring because the moment you become cool your nerves absorb.

A bag of hot sand relieves neuralgia.

Warm borax water will remove dandruff.

Salt should be eaten with nuts to aid digestion.

It rests you, in sewing, to change your position frequently.

A little soda water will relieve sick headache caused by indigestion.

A cupful of strong coffee will usually remove the odor of onions from the breath.

A cupful of hot water taken before meals relieves nausea and dyspepsia.

A fever patient can be made cool and comfortable by frequent sponging off with soda water.

A consumptive's night-sweats may be arrested by sponging the body nightly in salt water.

Ginger in hot water is a useful remedy for bilious colic.

Tolstoi's Maxims

Tolstoi's maxims on hygiene are being distributed throughout the Russian Europe. The code of health which brought him to such a hale old age may be summarized as follows:

1. Fresh air day and night.
2. Daily exercise.
3. Moderation in eating and drinking.
4. One hot bath weekly and a cold one daily.
5. A dry, spacious and sunny dwelling.
6. Scrupulous cleanliness.
7. Comfortable and not over heavy clothes.
8. Regular and intensive work, which acts as a preventive against ills of body and mind.
9. Rest after labor must not be sought in distractions. Night was intended for sleep.
10. The chief conditions for good health are a life fruitful in labor and ennobled by good actions.

ROMANTIC DAYS PAST

Wrong Ideas Engendered in Minds of Youthful Would-be Canadians

Sir Robert Baden-Powell inspected a Boy Republic at Wadhurst, in Sussex, where a lot of Boy Scouts are studying farming with a view to coming to Canada. On the occasion of his visit the boys elected a mayor, gave an exhibition of scouting work, and a Wild West performance.

It is to be feared that a dime novel idea of Canada is being encouraged in these young fellows, and that some disappointments are in store for them.

There is not much scouting to be done out here nowadays by young fellows on the farms. Beyond the occasional necessity for tracing a stray steer along a side line or Sherlock Holmesing along a fence to find a hole that a pig got through, there is not much doing in that line, and usually the farmer does it himself and leaves the youthful hired man to milk cows or chop feed.

All these romantic ideas and circus stunts may help in inducing boys to come to Canada, but it cannot be a good thing for Canada to land here a lot of young fellows who are going to be disappointed in every experience they encounter. There are fine openings in Canada for young men. But this is no fairyland, no land of romance. It is a country where everybody works as people work scarcely anywhere else in the world.—Toronto Star.

FINE HOODED SEAL

Eight-foot Specimen of the "Bladder Nose" Variety at University

A fine specimen of the hooded seal, or "bladder-nose," as it is called by the sealers, has just been placed on exhibition in the Biological Museum at Toronto University. It is a large specimen, about eight feet in length. There was no room for it in the ordinary cases, and it could not be exhibited until a special case had been constructed for its reception. The male has a peculiar bag of skin on its muzzle, which it has the power of inflating when excited. The present specimen shows this bag fully blown out, and certainly the name of "bladder-nose" very appropriately describes its curious appearance.

SEEING INTO SPACE

Distance to Which the Modern Telescope can Penetrate

With his forty-foot reflector Sir William Herschel perceived stars whose light, he concluded, had occupied 2,000,000 years in reaching the earth.

His belief that he had seen further into space than any other human being before him is pronounced a just one by that noted astronomer, Dr. T. J. J. See. The visual power of Herschel's telescope is somewhat surpassed by modern instruments, and much additional power is given to the modern instrument by the use of photography. But on the other hand account has now to be taken of the extinction of light by cosmical dust in space.

Neglecting this, Herschel slightly overestimated the distance to which his telescope could penetrate. With the greatest modern instruments and the use of photography, it is certain, Dr. See says that stars at a distance of over 2,000,000 light years can now be observed. It is very probable that the most up-to-date instruments can penetrate to a depth of about 5,000,000 light years.

BRITAIN AND HER COAL

Supply Sufficient for Four Hundred to Six Hundred Years

Based on statistics compiled in 1903, and on an increase annually of 2½ per cent., the coal consumption of Great Britain is as follows:

Railways	16,000,000
Coasting Steamers	9,000,000
Factories	66,000,000
Iron and Steel Works	35,000,000
Other Metal and Mineral Industries	1,250,000
Brick, Pottery, Glass, and Chemical Works	6,500,000
Gas Works	19,000,000
Private Houses	36,000,000

5 to 8 tons of coal per household is burned in open grate fires of British homes per annum.

Output of coal in British mines increases 2½ per cent. pen annum.

Exports of British coal increase 4½ per cent. per annum. Coal resources estimate sufficient for from 400 to 600 years.

MARRY OR MIGRATE

Bachelor Irishmen Claim They Were Driven From Home

Driven away from home because they positively refused to marry was the story told by a party of four Irishmen upon their arrival at Montreal.

Lloyd O'Brien, Harry Shannon and two brothers of the latter fell under the ban issued some months ago in their home town of Dunshaughen in county Meath. Owing to the excessive number of bachelors in the neighborhood the Town Council resolved to give everyone a chance to marry and then, if they still remained obdurate, to get rid of them. It was claimed that the general prosperity and welfare of the community demanded a diminution in the abnormal number of single men. So seventy-nine glaring cases were especially named and given notice that they must marry inside of six months or depart for pastures new.

The six months passed and thirteen of the bachelors were still unmarried. Four of them were staunch woman-haters and held out to the finish.

The Council carried out its threat and expelled the unlucky thirteen, four of whom found their way to Canada.

YOUTH ON HIS TRAVELS

German Who Finally Stole a Worthing Boat to Voyage to France

After absconding from his native town in Germany with $300 in money which he and another lad had stolen from his father, Hugo Eger, aged seventeen, finished up a series of adventures in England by tramping, in a penniless condition, from London to Worthing. Here he stole a small open sailing boat, with the intention of making his way across the Channel to France. Fortunately for the lad, he was rescued by some Selsey fishermen. He was in a state of collapse, and the boat, which was waterlogged, was drifting towards the shoals inside the Owers Lightship.

Eger pleaded guilty to stealing the boat and its accessories and was sent to prison for one month.

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

—BY—

CLIVE PHILLIPPS WOLLEY

(AUTHOR OF "GOLD, GOLD IN CARIBOO," ETC.)

Supplied Exclusively in Canada by The British & Colonial Press Service, Limited.

"In my bath room?"

"Yes, Kitty sits there sometimes when she wants me to stop talking and sleep, and I thought that she had come back."

"There is no one there now," said Rolt, coming back from the room. "Who did you think it was?"

"I don't know. I saw someone peering round the door at me. I thought that it was an Indian when I sat up and called, you know what happened."

"Did you hear the man move?"

"No; I only saw the face, or thought that I did, but perhaps it was only a sick man's fancy."

"He is a fraud, Kitty," decided Rolt, with a good-humored laugh," he wanted you back, and invented this bogie as an excuse to bring you back. Better not leave your post again," and so saying he dismissed the subject, but nevertheless he went into the little bathroom and looked round it very carefully. On the table beneath his looking-glass lay a handful of small silver, with his studs and some old gold seals in a china tray, and his watch was hung on a nail in the window frame. These were the only small moveables of any value in the room, and neither they nor anything else in the room appeared to have been touched. As he went out of the room he noticed a damp patch upon the polished wood of the stairs, which a vivid imagination might have made into the outline of a wet mocassin, but the Boss disregarded it.

Five minutes later when he met his wife downstairs, he asked whether she had found anything for the old woman.

"Yes, I made up quite a bundle for her; a warm petticoat and all sorts of thick things, Kitty's and mine; but the silly old thing has gone without them."

Rolt looked grave.

"Oh, you need not frown, Dick. We were rather long, I know, but it is so hard to decide what one really has done with, and if the old woman didn't get her clothes to-day, she will get them next week when she comes to give the house its monthly scrubbing."

Rolt looked out over the darkening landscape. The November day was drawing rapidly to a close, and he knew that old Mary had seven miles to trudge back to her rancherie, but it was curious that she had not waited. He could see the trail which led to the gulch through which ran Mary's road home, but there was no sign of Mary. Old as she was she must have moved quickly to have gained the shelter of the gulch already, or she could not have waited long for the clothes.

A question which Rolt wanted to ask was suppressed before it left his lips. Instead he asked his wife how long it was since old Mary had given the house one of her "thorough scrubbings."

"More than a month, I'm afraid, but you know they have all been away from the rancherie. Why? Do any of the rooms want scrubbing very badly, old man?"

"Oh, no, not a bit. I make a good deal of mess with my boots in the bath room, but you and Kitty look after the top floor, don't you, little woman. It is always as clean as a new pin in spite of my efforts to the contrary."

"What a delightful old humbug you are, Dick, where I am concerned," she said fondly. "I did not know that you would miss old Mary's ministrations. She cleans the whole house once a month, upstairs and down, but we ought to have kept up appearances at any rate in her absence. I will go and see to it at once."

This was more than Rolt had bargained for. He had obtained the information he wanted without alarming her, but by suggesting a fault where he knew none existed.

However, he followed his wife to the room, and was relieved to be shown all sorts of dirt and disorder, which he himself would never have noticed, but no trace could he find of that for which he was looking.

Nothing had been touched; nothing that he could think of was missing. Even that damp outline on the boards had dried off now. He wished that he had examined it more carefully, but, after all, it could not have been old Mary in his room, though she apparently did know the way to it.

He paused for a long minute, and went over everything carefully with his eye. By George! his Winchester had gone. No, it hadn't. There it was behind his oilskin, and there was absolutely nothing else which she could have wanted.

That face peering around the doorway must have been a sick man's fancy.

CHAPTER XVII.

In order to keep Anstruther amused and quiet, Mary Rolt had dinner served that night for the four of them in the bedroom, busying herself in making the pretty place as vivid a contrast as possible to the grim world outside.

A wood fire glowed merrily on the wide hearth, and the light of it was reflected by the silver and glass that nestled cosily in the folds of the rose-colored cretonne hangings.

"Do you want all the blinds drawn, Frank?" she asked with her hand on the last of them.

"Not unless you wish it."

"Well, then, I'll leave this one undrawn. I always snuggle into bed more cosily when I can peep out into a bitter night like that. Can you see down the valley from where you lie without moving? A peep at it will make the fire feel warmer and the room more homelike."

"It always feels homelike where you are, Mrs. Rolt."

She curtseyed to him with a laugh, and then, turning to Kitty, who had just entered the room, bade her be quick with the dinner.

"And see, my girl," she added, "that is not the way to lay a table," and then with a few deft touches rearranged some of the silver.

Kitty for the nonce had donned cap and apron, and Anstruther was not the first to discover more charm and coquetry in a maid's cap than in her mistress's toilette.

"Does the family expect to be waited on or does it stretch?" she asked, saucily.

"What do you mean, Katherine?"

"Where I was last, the family had to be waited on when it had a party, but when it was by itself it stretched like this," and reaching across the table she possessed herself of a salt cellar.

"You went as a lady-help, I suppose," retorted Mrs. Rolt, severely, "all lady and no help, like Miss Moran."

"What was her story?" asked Anstruther.

"Oh, she came out to help the poor dear boys, her brothers. They could not afford to hire any help, and just pigged until she came. At the end of a fortnight their sister had discovered exactly ninety-nine different things, each of which was, 'the only thing she never could do,' and actually, guessing who it was who cleaned the boots, she put hers outside her bedroom door every night."

"And?"

"And? Oh, and she married, of course, and her brothers do just as they did whilst she was with them, except that her husband cleans her boots now."

But Anstruther was not listening to Mrs. Rolt's libel on lady-helps. Instead, he was gazing intently through the uncurtained window at the foot of his bed, to which the others had their backs turned.

"Who would be camping down the valley to-night, Mrs. Rolt?" he asked.

"In the hay meadows? No one."

"Is not that a fire? Surely, my eyes are not playing me false again?"

The Boss turned lazily in his chair.

"Yes, that is a fire sure enough. There are two of them. Do you see that little one just beyond the first?"

Suddenly Rolt's face changed. He sprang to the window, took one searching glance down the valley, and then turned sharply to his wife, his face working with some feeling which he strove to control.

"Mary, dear, I want to speak to you for a moment. Will you excuse us, Frank?" and laying his hand on Kitty's shoulder as he passed, he whispered, "Keep him quiet whatever happens. I rely on you," and then he followed his wife from the room.

Once outside the door, his manner changed. "It's our stacks, little woman. Those devils are firing our winter feed. Keep cool and run now and tell the men in the dining-room. I'm off to the mess house to get the half-breeds. Keep your heart up; we'll stop them before they can do much damage."

He was running downstairs as he spoke, and snatched a Winchester from its rack as he passed out of the hall.

Mary Rolt's heart sank as she saw him snatch the rifle, but she did his bidding as he would have had her do it, with the utmost coolness, and when the men had rushed out after their master, she went back to the sick-room. There was no need for any explanation there.

Through the uncurtained window a glare of red light proclaimed the work that was on hand, even if the noise of saddling up and the hurry of hoofs beneath the window and the short sharp sentences of the mounting men had not told the tale.

"Is it shoot, Al?" they heard some one ask.

"Shoot? Aye, shoot to kill, curse them. Git, you devil," and a clatter of hoofs told that the horse had "got."

"Never mind the near stacks, boys; you can't save them. Ride for all you are worth to the first that is not lighted, and—" the Boss's voice died out as he galloped away with his men.

At the back of the ranch and on both sides of it lay a great enclosed meadow of about a thousand acres in a long parallelogram, and down the middle of it ran a chain of hay stacks, each fenced in, the feed upon which depended the safety of Rolt's stock if a hard winter should come.

There are years, many of them, luckily, in which these stacks need not be touched. In an open winter the cattle are carried without having resort to the store laid up for a hard spell, and in consequence some men trust to luck and keep little or no reserve of hay.

These are the men who fail in the cattle business. Sooner or later a deep snow comes; so deep that the cattle cannot paw it away to get at the grass beneath, and then the men who have not provided against such times lose every head of stock.

It means ruin to the improvident, but Dick Rolt was not such a fool as to take any chances where the safety of his cattle was concerned. Three years' hay was stacked in the thousand acres, and if none of it should be used the next year's crop would be cut and stacked just the same.

The sight which met the eyes of those who watched at the window would have been weirdly beautiful if the meaning of it had not been so hideous. The night was one which not only precluded any possibility of accidental ignition, but made it difficult to understand the rapidity with which stack after stack burst into flames.

The heavy Scotch mist with which the valley was filled—a freezing mist, which was almost rain—was crimson now.

Over twenty stacks, beginning with the one nearest to the ranch house, were in flames, one here and there which had failed to ignite standing out black and exaggerated in size, in the fierce light made by its fellows, whilst the roar of the burning could be heard where the watchers stood.

Down in the middle of the valley ran a chain of red fire, whilst the walls of it were still darkness made darker by contrast, and in this, imagination could paint the twelve or fourteen men who rode with their weapons in their hands and murder in their hearts.

Once or twice a figure was seen near the farthest of the stacks, thrown out in bold relief for a moment as the devil's work succeeded and the flames took hold, but though Mary Rolt held her breath to listen, there came no rattle of fire arms.

"Twenty-three, Mary, but it is ten minutes since the last blazed up."

"Stop where you are, Kitty. Mr. Anstruther, for God's sake, don't try to move. You can't help now," was Mrs. Rolt's only answer, and then she ran through her husband's bath-room and they heard her taking the stairs in headlong flight.

"Phon, oh, Phon," they heard her call, "bar the kitchen window, quick! Indians come cut your throat," and whilst she spoke they heard her turning the keys in the main doors and putting up the great bars.

"Run to her, Kitty, and help her. I shall be all right."

"Will you swear to keep still, Frank?"

"I swear. Run, dear."

The girl obeyed him, and a few moments later Mrs. Rolt, Kitty, and the frightened Chinese cook re-entered the room.

"They can't get in now unless they burst the doors," sobbed Mrs. Rolt, breathless with her exertions. "Watch that back door, Kitty, whilst I call the men," and she ran to her husband's room again for the revolver which hung there.

Tearing away the curtains, and throwing the little window open, she peered out, but the light inside was too bright. She could see nothing.

"Put the lamp out, Kitty," she called, and as the light went out in obedience to her order, she saw dimly something moving in the shadow of a house where the stores were kept.

At once her revolver rang out, shot after shot, until every chamber was empty. It mattered little whether she hit or missed. The main thing was to recall the men, and almost before she had ceased firing a horse's hoofs thundered through the corrals, and a voice hailed her.

"That you shooting, Polly? Take care. Don't shoot any more," and then for a moment there was bedlam in the darkness outside, horses galloping amongst the buildings, and men running, and twice the sharp metallic ring of a rifle.

After that the main body of galloping hoofs seemed to recede towards the hills, but the Boss and old Al rode up to the house.

"Open the door and give me a lantern, my girl. They have all gone, I think, except two, and they won't do any more harm."

There was a hardness in the Boss's voice, which Mary Rolt had never heard before in all the years she had known him, but then she had never seen him before in the light of his blazing stacks.

"Did you see anyone when you fired," he asked, as soon as she had let him in.

"I think so, but I am not certain. Oh, Dick, I have not killed anyone, have I?" she cried, breaking down suddenly, and clinging to him.

"Steady, there; steady, little woman. Keep your nerve a bit longer. You are doing splendidly. No, you have not hit any one, more's the pity. Where did you think you saw them?"

"Over there by the store-house."

"Ah! But they could not get in in the time. Lucky we tumbled to their game. Just go and look at the house, Al,' touching his arm and whispering, "say nothing if the missus has shot straight."

The old man nodded and went out. In a couple of minutes he was back again for the lantern. When he returned again he handed the Boss a key.

"I thought as you allus kept that yourself, Boss."

"Where did you find it?"

"In the door of the store-house."

Rolt looked down at it for a moment. "The old devil," he muttered.

"Just so. But how did he come to get it?"

"Old Mary must have stolen it from my room when she came begging this afternoon."

"Guess so. Women had ought to do their own chores. I ain't got no use for Injins round a ranch. They've got all the rifles."

"What?"

"All them spare rifles and three or four dozen boxes of cartridges, I should say, though some of them won't help em much. The rifles are forty-fives, and half the cartridges were for your fifty hundred and ten. Guess we bustled em a bit or they wouldn't have made such a fool break as that."

Whilst they were speaking Mary Rolt had remained unnoticed with them. Now her husband saw her and bade her run up stairs and tell the other two that it was all over and no harm done.

When she had gone master and man faced each other for some minutes in silence.

"Can't save the stacks, Al?"

"That don't make no odds. We've plenty left."

"I suppose so, if we are lucky enough to live to want it."

"Oh, we shall. We'll pull through all right, but I wish the women folk were out of this, at Sody Creek or Victoria."

"You think it is war, then?"

"You bet it's war. What did they want them rifles for. They only burned the stacks to get a show at the store."

There was no answer to this, but the two listening heard the beat of the returning hoofs, and before long about half of the men of the ranch reined up their lathering horses in front of the mess house.

"Did you get any of 'em?" asked Al.

"Devil a hoof."

"You got sick of the hunt mighty quick."

"Yes," drawled one of the boys. "I ain't almighty stuck on night hunts. Once you're over the hog's back it's darker nor the ways of a provincial politician. It's so blanked dark it fairly drowns you after that glare," and he looked towards the blazing stacks. "The Injins kinder sunk out of sight in it."

"We shall have to send some one to warn the Fairclough's."

"That's done, Boss. I sent Dan. He's up half way to Grouse Creek by now if the Injins haven't got him."

"Thank you, Al. I think two of you had better come in and sleep in the house to-night, just to reassure the ladies. The rest of you had better sleep with your horses, and there will have to be a couple on the look out all night. They might try to rush us."

"Not whilst them illuminations is turned on," said Al. "I guess you can sleep solid to-night. When it's dark it will be different. But I'll see to the look-outs, Boss, when we've put them two out of sight," and he pointed to where something lay in the shadow of the stables.

"It was a pity as it was Kineeshaw," he added. "There'll be no let up now until they wipe us out or some one lets daylight into old Khelowna. He thought a heap of Kineeshaw."

CHAPTER XVIII.

That night the watchers watched in vain. The three and twenty stacks of good hay which should have been turned into beef at thirty or forty dollars a head, flared up and then died down into clear red hearts of fire, and in the white day light were nothing but grey spots on the home meadow. They had been licked up as clean as the mist was by the sun, and left little more trace than the Indians who had lighted them.

These had vanished utterly.

Two spots of fresh turned earth, outside the corrals, might suggest the recent presence of the Chilcotens to those who knew what lay below, but these and the charred railings where the stacks had stood were all the traces they had left.

From the hog's back to the black timber of the enclosing hills there was no sign of a camp fire, no hint of a man's presence, and one by one the scouts sent out from the ranch came back with the same story. The Indians had been about a score in number, and were not now to be seen, neither had they left any trail to say which way they had gone. The most experienced among the trackers guessed that they had scattered, and it was impossible to say where they would reunite. But Jim would be back, said the men, and then they could make up their minds what to do.

"But Jim did not come. Though they watched for him from hour to hour; though even an ordinary rider in ordinary haste might have been back before the second night fell. The dark came again, and with it no Jim Combe.

Neither did morning bring him, and it was not until late afternoon on the fourth day that two men walked slowly before their led horses into the corrals.

Kitty, whose impatience was devouring her, saw them come. Jim was smoking, of course, and staring about him as he slouched along without a sign of haste, without a shout to tell that he had come. Surely never any man walked as slowly as Jim Combe, never any man looked less like the express messenger returned.

"He doesn't seem in a hurry," said Kitty, and there was a world of disappointment and bitterness in her tone. She expected every one to show his excitement as she did hers.

"Did you ever expect Jim to look as if he hurried?" asked Mrs. Rolt, who was leaning over the girl's shoulder at the window. "Did you want Jim to boil up a gallop at the finish like the driver of an Irish jaunting car? Look at the horses."

They indeed told a tale of haste in the past, haste of which they were no longer capable, and possibly any man with a view to effect might have dragged his limbs as the horses dragged theirs.

Jim only walked slowly and limped a little, stopping to speak to one of the boys and to help him off-saddle the roan. Then he walked quietly to the house with the doctor, not stopping to hear much of what old Al had to tell him.

But he managed to take in a great deal in those quiet glances which Kitty resented so much.

"Any one hurt?" were his first words to Al, before the old man had time to open his mouth.

"Two of them hurt badly," pointing to the fresh earth. "None of our folk scratched."

"Didn't try to rush the ranch then?"

"Broke the store-house and got the guns while we were at the stacks."

"Might have known that they would try that. What did you all want to go to the stacks for? Didn't calculate to blow them out, did you?"

Al hung his head. It is dispiriting when you have a great story to tell, to have it understood and sentence pronounced before you have had time to open your lips.

"How many Injuns were there?"

"About fifteen, I guess."

"More than that," said the man who had not been there; but he did not stop to argue or hear any more details. He remembered the two bands which he had seen on his way to Soda Creek, and he knew all that it was vital to know, so he followed Protheroe quietly to the house.

The doctor's report was a good one and soon made. When sober he was a capable man, and Anstruther's injuries, however painful, were sufficiently simple.

"A bundle of nerves, fine bred and high strung," was Protheroe's comment. "A steer who had had the same smash up would have gone on feeding. Three ribs broken, badly shaken up, and bruised a bit, of course; but the ribs have knit already. You did the right thing, Mrs. Rolt. These are your bandages?"

"No, they are Jim's."

"Of course. I ought to have known Jim's packing; effective, but a trifle severe. Here, let me loosen them a little," and his deft fingers, which were as delicate as a woman's and as strong as a man's, played about Anstruther with astonishing rapidity.

"That's better, isn't it?"

Anstruther sighed. "Yes, I can move now, I think, without fainting."

"But you must not; at least, not much. Jim was on the right track, but he certainly did not give you much play. You don't drink much, do you?"

INDIAN TRIBES BEING STUDIED

Anthropologists Collecting Valuable Data on the Aborigines of Canada

Much interesting information and many valuable specimens and songs illustrating different phases in the life of the North American Indians has been obtained through field work carried on under the direction of the ethnological branch of the Canadian Geological Survey.

Mr. C. M. Barbeau, permanent assistant in anthropology, is continuing his work among the Wyandotte Indians in Oklahoma, which he started more than a year ago. These Indians are of Canadian origin. Among other things he has obtained several hundred Wyandotte songs by means of gramophone records, facts regarding religion and mythology, information about language and records of old Indian traditions.

Dr. P. Radin of Columbia university, an auxiliary member of the field staff, has carried on research work among the Ojibway or Chippewa Indians, visiting Sarnia, Orillia, North Bay, Sault Ste. Marie and Manitoulin Island. He has amassed a large stock of manuscript information on Ojibway mythology and customs and Indian texts.

At the Six Nations' reserve on the Grand River, near Brantford, Dr. A. A. Goldenweiser, collected considerable valuable material concerning the Iroquois, while Mr. F. W. Waugh, of Toronto has been engaged in research into the industries and material life generally of the same tribe. His work was principally in connection with the foods, medicines, diets, and industries of the race. From one man he has secured no fewer than 70 different medicines in use among the Indians.

There is now at the Victoria Memorial Museum, at Ottawa, a very full and representative collection of Iroquois specimens. When the branch was started in 1910 there was only one, while there are now about 700. Particular attention has been paid to the eastern tribes, which had been neglected. Dr. F. G. Speck, visited the Montagnais, on Lake St. John and the Lower St. Lawrence, and secured a large collection, including three birch bark canoes. All the specimens have been carefully labelled and catalogued. Mr. F. H. S. Knowles, of Oxford university, Eng., specialist in physical anthropology, has been engaged studying the physical anthropology of the Iroquois, measuring the men, women and children, and securing specimens of hair, etc.

STILL LIVES AS QUEEN

Though Long Years in Exile Eugenie Retains Old-time Royal Etiquette

The aged Empress Eugenie has now spent 42 years of her life in exile, but still likes to retain in her home the royal etiquette she enjoyed at the height of her fame and beauty as the wife of Napoleon III.

For instance, at her English home, Chiselhurst, her week-end guests are all expected to bow low when the Empress enters the drawing-room before dinner. In spite of her great age, the Empress can still make a stately courtesy, and this she does, taking in all the guests with the one bow, and afterward proceeding alone before her guests into the dining-room.

In the little hotel where the Empress frequently stays in Paris she is treated by the manager and servants just as if she were still Empress. These little attentions please the old lady immensely.

These little weaknesses of the Empress Eugenie appeal to her friends, but the same cannot be said of the Duke d'Orleans, who has sold Wood Norton to Sir Charles Swinfen Eady.

The duke has announced that his wife's health does not permit her to remain in England, but clubmen in London tell a very different story. They say the duke was so unpopular he could never get guests to stay at Wood Norton, where he kept up a ridiculously regal state, even to making servants walk backward from his presence.

Englishmen never forgave the duke for his ingratitude to his country, which he displayed by grossly affronting Queen Victoria at the time of the Boer war.

USES APE'S STOMACH

Marvellous Operation Upon a Frenchman and its Drastic Test

A man's stomach was removed by a French doctor and replaced with the stomach of an anthropoid ape, which of course, an ape very close to a man in the rising scale of development.

So joyous was the recipient of the new stomach that at the first opportunity he became intoxicated. Naturally the ape had never tasted liquor and the stomach he gave was so healthy that it did not suffer by being drenched in alcohol.

This remarkable operation and restoration of the part exercised, the first of its kind, was performed by Dr. Roulics, a famous surgeon in the hospital at Agen, 78 miles southeast of Bordeaux. The patient was a farmer, 27 years of age, whose stomach was worn out and worthless. With the most delicate skill and the nicest knowledge of anatomy the surgeon opened the patient's abdomen and tying the great arteries as the operation proceeded, took out the useless stomach. After twenty-five days of treatment the cure was complete; the young farmer left the hospital, and as if to test his new stomach, went on a spree.

A CRUEL LODGER

Flesh Burnt off Woman's Arms Because Dinner was Not Ready

A revolting story of the revenge of a hungry lodger was told at the London police court when Lewis Chapman, of Willesden, was charged with assaulting Mrs. Field, a woman with whom he lodged, by burning her with a red-hot poker.

Mrs. Field said that her lodger came home in a bad temper, and because his dinner was not ready he locked her in a room, made the poker red-hot, and burnt the flesh of both her arms. Ever since she had been in intense agony.

The lodger, who stated that he only "acted in self-defence," was sentenced to six months' hard labor without the option of a fine.

Bronchitis Cured By Medicated Air

NO DRUGS TO TAKE — YOU SIMPLY BREATHE A HEALING BALSAMIC VAPOR

Every Breath Carries Healing Balsams to the Sick, Sore Places in the Nose and Throat.

Montreal this time gives splendid praise for the modern way of curing colds, catarrh and bronchitis.

Instead of taking sickening drugs into the stomach, or using an old-fashioned spray, the sensible man nowadays breathes the soothing vapors of Catarrhozone and gets well right away. This is exactly what Mr. Joseph Daouse did, and writing from his office at 57 St. Paul street, he says:—

"I suffered for years with the worst form of chronic bronchial throat and nasal catarrh. I tried all kinds of syrups, ointments, tablets and washes, but they proved ineffective. In fact I could get no relief. I read in the Montreal Witness of Catarrhozone and bought an outfit. In a few hours I got relief. The air passages of my nose were cleared out, and I was able to breathe freely. My throat was strengthened—my voice improved—and no longer gagged and coughed. The effect of Catarrhozone was wonderful. Now I am well—no bronchitis—no throat distress. I urge everyone with a weak throat, with a cough, a cold or a touch of catarrh to use Catarrhozone freely."

Get the Dollar outfit — lasts two months and is guaranteed. Smaller sizes 25c. and 50c. each, all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Company, Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

I got the whiskey from an Englishman. I don't know his name. I could point him out on the street. I was notvery drunk when I could hitch up a horse and drive a policeman to the station.—$10.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars nad testimonials.

Danny Simons Goes Afishing.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Danny Simons, Peterborough's successful actor, who plays the part of "Happy Hooligan" in the play of that ilk, went afishing, with his aged uncle from Emily. They rowed down to T.A.S. Park. En route, southwards, Danny, as became a dutiful nephew, bent his back at the oars as uncle handled the trolling line. Just passing Yankee Bonet, the old gentleman felt a tug at the line and began to haul in. The line slackened and the old gentleman sighed and remarked, "Danny, we've lost a big fish." However, in a moment the line became taut and was again hauled in. Again it slackened, and again becoming firm, was pulled in. Dan left the oars, grabbed, the stretches and cried, "leave that fish to me, uncle, I'll settle its hash." With the wooden bar tightly clasped and eyes ablaze, Dan pulled in a waterlogged board that had been carried in all directions by the current. Notwithstanding this slight misadventure, Mr. Simons brought back three 'lunge of an aggregate weight of 31 pounds, the heaviest pulling the scales down at 11½ pounds, and they were not caught with a silver bait, either.

SUNLIGHT AND SHADOW ON THE DIAL OF A CITY LIFE.

Lindsay is going to observe Aug. 4th as Civic Holiday.

Mr. James Armstrong, with his picolo and drum band, filled an important engagement in the 12th of July procession in Toronto.

Mr. R. W. Travers, manager of the Bank of Montreal, has purchased a beautiful new motor car from J. J. Duffus.

The local Fire Department received instruction in hose drill yesterday morning at the corner of Simcoe and Stewart streets.

If Lindsay's citizens do not cut down noxious weeds from their respective places of residence, an inspector will get busy and charge cutting on the taxes of delinquents.

The local Greeks within the last few days raised a fund of several hundred dollars, which will be forwarded to Greece, to assist in the war against Bulgaria.

Lindsay is going to compel its merchants to limit watering the pavements to early morning hours, so that dainty little maidens with white shoes and stockings will not have their understanding resemble the coat of a leopard.

WORK OF FINANCE MINISTER SAVES UNION POLICY HOLDERS

All Union Life Policies Are to be Taken Over and Guaranteed by Strong Metropolitan Company

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, July 15.—The one hundred and fifty thousand policy holders of the Union Life Assurance Company have Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance to thank that their life's savings have not been swept away. If it had not been for the action of the Finance Minister in forcing the company to shut its doors before everything was gone and in negotiating with the Metropolitan Life Assurance Co. to take over all the policies not a thing would have been saved from the wreck. It would have been a repetition of the disastrous York County Loan Co. affair.

All Re-Insured.

The final agreement of re-insurance has been signed and the Metropolitan takes over all the policies on the same terms as they were carried by the Union Life. Even lapsed policies are to be granted re-instatement on the payment of arrears without medical examination. Mr. White has spent many a restless hour trying to save the money of the policyholders during the past few months and the outcome reflects the greatest credit on the Insurance Department and the Finance Minister.

Steadily Losing.

The Union has been in trouble for some time and has been steadily running behind. It was warned first by the Minister that it must strengthen its investmentes and must cut down expenses. The license was renewed then only a month at a time and when the Minister saw the situation was hopeless the license was cancelled in May. Liquidation in which case the policyholders would have got but little or re-insurance, were the only solutions and it was through the personal efforts of the Minister that the Metropolitan Life finally took over all policies and on such favorable terms.

BULGARIANS BURNED VILLAGE OF DOXAT

They Left Seventy Loads of Ammunition Behind for the Greeks.

Salonika, July 15.—The Greek commander reports that Bulgarian troops fleeing before the advance of the Greeks yesterday burned the village of Doxat to the south of Drama, on the railroad between that place and Kavala, and massacred 500 of the inhabitants.

Heavy fighting ensued as a result of which the Greeks occupied the town of Drama, 30 miles to the north-east of Seres. The Bulgarians fled in disorder, leaving 79 wagon loads of ammunition on the field.

POWERS DESIRE THE UNITED STATES TO QUIET MEXICO

Washington Asked What It Proposes to Do--Must End The Disturbance

Mexico City, July 15.—An additional complication in the relations between Mexico and the United States may result from the attitude assumed by the European diplomats stationed here. It has become known that all of them, acting in concert, have sent to their respective Governments identical notes, in which they declare that the position taken by the United Stateswith reference to Mexico was contributing to revolutionary conditions, and suggesting that the representatives at Washington of the respective European countries be instructed to request recognition or that the United States assume responsibility for the state of affairs here.

The newspapers yesterday printed little anti-American matter, such as characterized their columns for several days past. By order of President Heurta all the departments of the Government were closed to-day and all the Government employees were given a holiday in honor of the French residents who celebrated the anniversary of the fall of Bastile.

Washington Is Notified.

Washington, July 15.—Already one of the great European powers, through its diplomatic representatives here, has called the attention of Secretary Bryan to the chaotic conditions in Mexico and the effect upon the welfare and safety of its citizens there with a polite inquiry as to what the United States proposes to do about it.

Whether the inquiry was part of a concerted movement on the part of European powers to bring the State Department to a declaration of its purpose toward Mexico did not develop to-day. Reports from the city of Mexico, however, would appear to warrant that conclusion.

Until very recently President Wilson has attached little importance to rumors of outside influences being brought to bear to cause the United States to recognize the Heurta regime. It is beginning to be apparent now that there must be very soon some official declaration on the subject to reassure the European powers on the protection of their citizens and subjects against pecuniary loss by the continuance of present conditions. Failing such a declaration, some officials fear that European powers may hold themselves to take steps to restore peace.

ENDS OF STEEL GROWING NEARER

Coast Section Will Be Linked Up With Prairie Section Year From Now.

Vancouver, B.C., July 15.—A gap of only thirty-eight miles now separates construction gangs along the route of the Canadian Northern working south from Alberta summit and north from Kamloops.

Alberta Summit is about 40 miles from Tete Jaune Cache and construction gangs now at work there have the work well advanced along the Fraser River. D. J. McDonald, land commissioner of the Canadian Northern, says the coast section will be linked up by rail with the prairie section by the middle of next summer.

CHANCE TO INVEST IN COAL AND BRICK CO

Attention is called to an advertisement in this issue of the British-Canadian Brick and Coal Co., Ltd., incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies' Act. This company as will be seen is incorporated with the comparatively small authorized capital of $500,000, thus ensuring a better investment for dividends than companies with a big watered amount of stock.

The company is offering $200,000 of 7 per cent. preferred stock, with a bonus of 25 per cent. of common stock, at $10 per share. The company has absorbed the Excelsior Coal and Brick Co., Ltd., paying that concern with stock. The re-organized company promises to be the greatest of its kind in the Canadian Northwest. There is a constantly increasing demand for brick, and the company claim to own clay beds that will produce the finest quality of brick. For full particulars address Messrs. McLaughlin & Smith, 503 Lindsay Building, Winnipeg, Man.

A reliable stock salesman is wanted.

BASEBALL

The Petes took another game from the Ambitious City yesterday.

The Petes have made the turn in the race and are now on the home stretch, and slowly step by step they are coming to the front in the race for the pennant. Yesterday's game brings them up another notch and when the end of the season arrives, you will not need to look out of the first division to find the Petes.

Sterling did the twirling and put up his usual good game while McNeal held him up behind the plate.

The score stood 6—3 in favor of the Petes.

CHILDREN DECLARE EVIDENCE IS FALSE

New Trial Ordered For Preacher Convicted of Burning Three Children to Death.

Fort Smith, Ark., July 15.—Marion Capps, a preacher, convicted of burning his three children to death, has been granted a new trial by the Supreme Court, according to information received here

The jury's failure to state the degree of murder of which Capps was guilty, and the alleged affidavits of his fifteen-year old daughter, Bertha and his twelve-year old son, Ellis, that they had testified falsely against him at his trial, were stated as the grounds for granting the new trial. The testimony of the children convicted their father.

CONGRESS TO BARE INSIDE BIG STRIKES

Dark Corners of McNamara Dynamiting Case to be Explored--Biggest Marvels Yet Looked for

Special to The Times.

Washington, July 15.—All the wars that have been fought between labor and capital, all the efforts that both have made to secure legislation which would profit them and the tangled skein woven about their relations in the last ten years are to be investigated by Congress.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, will appear before the committee on July 25, and a subpoena was issued for John Mitchell, vice-president of the Federation and former head of the United Mine Workers. At the same time the committee subpoenaed George Pope, president and J. P. Bird, general manager of the National Association of Manufacturers.

As the tale is unfolded, other men prominent in either labor organizations or associations of manufacturers or individual employers of labor who are brought to notice, will be asked to appear.

The committee decided to look into this subject, believing that it may bring out startling information and knowing the it will extend their inquiry many weeks. One senator said to-night that the quest might reach back into some of the dark corners of the McNamara dynamiting case, and might bring into the light the inside story of many of the great strikes that have paralyzed industries and thrown thousands out of work in the last few years. He intimated, too, that it might develop by far the most marvelous of all the strange tales that the committee has heard in the past six weeks.

Thousands of letters involving many men who were once prominent in Congress, as well as some still in public life, have been furnished the committee, and Mulhall's examination may take several days. The committee decided to-night to grant a request from the association to be represented by counsel. It decided also not to turn over the Mulhall papers to the House special investigating committee until it has finished with them, although Chairman Garratt asked for them to-day.

Chairman Overman heard a report to-night that Mulhall has been told to get out of Washington. Mulhall did not know who made the threat. Mr. Overman said steps would be taken to protect Mulhall, if necessary, by delegating a deputy sergeant-at-arms to guard him.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC PARTY TO ORGANIZE

French Canadians to Enter Political Field Under Authority of Church

Special to The Times.

Montreal, July 15.—It has been practically decided to form a Clerical party in the Dominion, with Montreal as its headquarters. This was the outcome of the meeting held at Three Rivers, Que., a few days ago under the auspices of the Roman heirarchy of the Province. Those who took part in the meeting represent a type of French-Canadian Roman Catholicism, which stands pledged to unswerving and unquestioning loyalty to the Church and sturdy advocacy of the French language, as Dr. George H. Baril put it: "The Association would stand for absolute and unquestioning submission to the Church in its right to control education, and would resist the interference of the Government in the sphere of education." "The Church" he said, "has the sacred right to direct the education of its youth, and to see that none of the books of instruction are allowed to contain anything in the least injurious to the doctrines of the Catholic Church. It is the business of the State to give protection and financial assistance, if need be, but not to take charge of national education."

MR. J. H. BURNHAM M. P. ON QUESTIONS OF DAY

The City Council has not expressed an opinion in answer to your request regarding the salary increase proposed by a large majority of the members of Parliament, has it, Mr Burnham?

"Not as yet, so far as I am aware," said he. "I read an amusing account of it The Examiner, which. I must say, is always at its best during the silly season. That paper drags in the statement that I am prepared to consult the people about the proposed salary increase, but not about the navy expenditure. That is not so. If I had my way I would go to the country to-morrow on the navy question with the sure and certain hope that the people would say that much as they regretted to have to spend good money on such absurd things as weapons of destruction it was better to do so as proposed by Mr. Borden, that to start ourselves off on a career of national responsibility and naval extravagance as proposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But the Examiner conveniently forgets that Sir Wilfrid's naval defence Act of 1910 contemplating a settled policy and a huge expenditure was drawn up and assented without consulting the electors at all. It does not do for a journal to fall into mistakes like that. The people demand at least some degree of consistency. However, to return to the indemnity question for a moment, I may say that I have entertained "public" opinions enough to warrant me in continuing to oppose the salary grab without being accused by my fellow-members of being a mere wanton obstructionist in that particular. That is what I was after.

THEY CALL WINNIPEG SLAYER AND HE IS STONE BLIND

Walter Eves Who Shot and Killed Beautiful Mrs. Hancock, to Asylum

Winnipeg, July 15.—Walter Eves, in custody on a charge of murdering Mrs. A. M. Hancock, his paramour, has been pronounced insane by the Provincial Government medical examiners, and will be removed to Selkirk Asylum. Eves is stone blind.

Mrs. Hancock was reported to have been the most beautiful woman in Winnipeg. Eves became acquainted with her in England and brought her to this country and for some time they lived in Winnipeg as man and wife. Later they separated, and Eves, apparently, sought freedom from the entanglement. He was an assistant in a doctor's office in the Somerset Block and Mrs. Hancock was in the employment of a departmental store as a saleslady.

Called Woman Vampire.

One morning last winter Eves took the woman to his employer's office, took her into a private room and killed her with a shot from a revolver. He then turned the weapon upon himself, succeeded in putting through his head a bullet which cost him the sight of both eyes and gradually weakened his mental powers. For a long time he lay between life and death and finally recovered sufficiently to be placed on trial for murder Since that time his mental condition has become worse and the result is his commitment for insanity.

Eves had carefully planned the murder and suicide and had written a note blaming the woman for the affair and referring to her as a vampire.

SIR WILFRED IS ILL

According to Miss Elizabeth Foley owner of the store, the woman bought a handkerchief and while she was being waited on drew a revolver from a handbag, held up the owner and two women clerks and made away with $100.

Mrs. Brunner is the wife of Joseph Brunner, owner of an automobile garage to which her car was traced. A chauffeur in Brunners employ admitted he had driven Mrs. Brunner to the store.

TORONTO YACHT, "SENECA," HAD STRENUOUS TIME ON LAKE

William Jarvis and His Crew Were Hungry and Cold When They Drifted in to Cape Vincent, Near Kingston

Kingston, July 15.—The yacht Seneca, Toronto, is in port after a strenuous time on the lake from Saturday until Monday morning. The yacht and party were en rodte to Toronto, when off False Ducks their spreaders broke, followed by the smashing of the mast. As there was a heavy sea, the boat was in great danger, but with the little sail that could be put up, the crew managed to keep moving, drifting hither and thither until Monday morning, when they were able to make Cape Vincent.

William Jarvis was in command of the yacht. He is the son of Aemelius Jarvis, the well known Toronto yachtsman. They suffered from hunger as well as cold, as a heavy gale was blowing, and they were without provisions. They breakfasted in Kingston on Saturday morning and did not have another meal until Cape Vincent was reached

They lost their dinghy, and have not as yet heard as to where it is. The yacht is now in Richardson's slip and is awaiting a new mast from Toronto, which will likely arrive within a day

JEWISH RIOTERS RESENT THE CHRISTIAN PROSELYTISING

Three Courts Busy Dealing With Five Offenders--No Business There Declares Mr. Cohen

Toronto, July 15.—Five arrests, three fines, many minor injuries suffered by the participants and a growing resentment in Hebrew circles over the methods employed by Rev. Henry Singer are among the results of the riot which occurred last evening at the corner of St. Patrick street and Kensington avenue.

Mr. Singer is a convert and a Christian missionary to his own people. For years he has been a storm centre in the Jewish sections of the city, but it is doubtful if he ever had a more exciting experience in all his years than this most recent one. With sticks, stones and other missiles flying about his head he was rescued by the police of No. 3 station. He escaped injury himself but all about him members of the angry mob showed the marks of combat. Several children were injured, women were crushed in the mob and several angry adult males were damaged, though none, so far as known, seriously.

Boy Was Fined.

Samuel Greenburg, aged nineteen, living at 5 Kensington avenue, was the only prisoner obtained by the police to appear in the police court this morning, the woman prisoners appearing in the woman's court and three children in the juvenile court.

Greenberg pleaded guilty to a charge of being disorderly, but was firmly of the opinion that if he had not chased P. C. Lewis off his verandah, he would not have been arrested.

According to Greenberg's tale he was driven off the street by the constable at the time the crowd was shouting and booing Mr. Singer! He went up on his verandah and according to the constable's evidence, started inciting the crowd to throw stones and break up the meeting. He was fined $5 without costs or fifteen days. Mr. Singer was a spectator during the proceedings.

Rosie Isrealson, a married woman aged 18, living at 11 Kensington avenue, appeared in the woman's court but was remanded until July 22nd.

BAR CLUBS FOR POLICE-WOMEN

Chicago, July 15— It is the opinion of prominent local suffragists that a police-woman-Mayor Harrison has asked that 10 of them be appointed should have the following qualifications.

She must be strong.

She must have nerve.

She must have had experience in social service.

She must understand young people

She must have common sense.

She must have ideals.

The demand for a corps of policewomen created not a little excitement among the many thousands of new women voters.

Suffragists were keen in their discussion of what uniform the proposed addition to the police force should be. The more militant believe they should carry revolvers, but none took kindly to the idea of a policewoman swinging a club.

Mrs. Gertrude Howe Britton of the Juvenile Protective League, who was chiefly influential in persuading the Mayor that Chicago needs police women, asserted that the female officers should not be armed, but "should make their way with women's weapons, the chief of which is just common sense."

WOMAN LEADER TAKES ON A HUSBAND.

London, July 15.—Miss Inez Milholland, a leader in the woman suffrage movement in New York, was married to-day in London to Eugene Boissevain, a wealthy Dutchman, of Amsterdam, described as having no occupation.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Easterly winds and a little cooler.

BARS OPEN 45 MINUTES FROM TORONTO DOCKS

Toronto, July 15.—That convictions for violation of the liquor license law have been registered with regularity against passenger vessels plying on Lake Ontario, is revealed by an investigation of a return made to the Legislative assembly during the past session. It is also apparent that these convictions were usually made against a number of vessels on the same date, and that the amount of the fine has steadily increased from $50 in 1907, to $200 in this year.

Inspector Jennings, of Toronto, who has laid the information this year, upon which the convictions were obtained, said that he had made a trip on each of the vessels which had been convicted. He did not locate the bars very easily but found that they opened out when about 45 minutes from Toronto, while the boat was still in Canadian waters.

"Do you only prosecute the boats once a year?" he was asked.

"I have no returns of the number of times we have laid informations in previous years, you will have to go to the department for that information."

Pressed as to whether this prosecution was merely an annual event, Mr. Jennings declared that they were ready to take up charges as often as they had information to the effect that the law was being violated.

When it was pointed out that section 10 of the Liquor License Law stated that liquor shall not be sold "nor kept for sale in any room or place on any such vessel," the Inspector answered that a search warrant would have to be obtained if they were to take any action.

CUT WIFE'S THROAT IN SON'S PRESENCE

Montreal, July 15.—Following a quarrel with his wife last evening, Telesphore Roberge, 46 years of age, of 600 St. Lawrence Boulevard, seized a razor and, before the eyes of his 14-year-old son, Cerille, slashed his wife's throat with the weapon.

The terrified little boy ran to the City Hall Avenue Police Station, where he reported the affair to the officer in charge, but when the police arrived the husband was nowhere to be found. Mrs. Roberge, bleeding profusely from an ugly gash in her throat and with the fingers of one hand nearly severed where she had attempted to wrest the weapon from her assailant, was taken to the General Hospital, where she lies in a serious condition.

TO OVERCOME SUNBURN, TAN, FRECKLES, WRINKLES

(From Outdoor Life.)

If you are freckled, tanned or sunburnt, dab a liberal amount of mercolized wax on the face and allow it to remain over night. When you wash off the wax in the morning, fine, flaky, almost invisible particles of cuticle come with it. Repeating this daily, the entire outer skin is absorbed, but so gradually, there's not the slightest hurt or inconvenience. Even the stubbornest freckles yield to this treatment. The underlying skin which forms the new complexion is so fresh and youthful-looking you'll marvel at the transformation. It's the only thing I know to actually discard an aged, faded, muddy or blotchy complexion. It is fine for a discolored neck. One ounce of mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store, is sufficient in most cases.

If sun and wind make you squint and frown, you're bound to cultivate wrinkles and crow's feet. To overcome these quickly bathe the face in a solution made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 382 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

RETURNING TO THE LAND

Canadian Born Artisans Find Little Attraction in Eastern States Now

"The tide is turned and the pressure is backwards," writes Dr. Andrew Macphail in the University Magazine. "The word has gone forth that the Eastern States are finished for the wage earners. Men who went there thirty years ago as artisans find themselves with scant savings and their sons growing up as factory hands. In their extremity they call to mind the pleasant hillsides of Quebec and the fertile valleys of the Maritime Provinces from which they came, where their fathers led the lives of freemen and not the mere existence of slaves. The problem will solve itself in terms of freedom, to which eventually all men come who are born free. In the return to the land it is the first person who counts. Others follow, and more because they must. It will attach itself to the soil again to love the land of its birth. One part of the country is as good as any other to one who was born there. A tree is more easily transplanted than a man, and once rooted it should not be disturbed. City dwellers are much like driftwood which yet has some capacity for regeneration. When they come to a full comprehension of the futility of the machines and the factory, they will learn to apply their labor to the thing itself and not to the making of machines which yet leave the thing undone. Ancient wars had their origin in the desire to bring a people into bondage, or in the resolve of a people to be free. Modern wars have their origin in the desire to exploit a people by planting industries amongst them upon the fictitious plea of economic necessity. To-day the war is between those, on the one hand, and those who produce more than they consume. Rising prices are a sign of the conflict. There can be but one ending to it."

THE SUPERIOR TURK

Marshal von der Goltz, who was responsible for the reorganization of the Turkish army under Abdul Hamid gives this reason for its high fighting quality—that every Turk feels himself to be a member of a ruling race, immeasurably superior to the Christian nationalities about him. This feeling of intense pride sustains him in battle. He comes of a hardy peasant stock inured to privation and open-air life. He is usually familiar with the use of arms from childhood. All that he needs to assimilate when he joins the ranks is the more mechanical part of discipline.

GREAT AEROPLANE FLEET

Germany is Devoting Much Attention to Air Warfare

"Germany has at last consecrated itself in earnest to the development of an aeroplane fleet," said Major von Tschudi, the distinguished aeronautical officer, who has developed Johannisthal to its present eminent position. "We have not lost our faith in the superiority of dirigible airships for the carrying of men and explosives, but the aeroplane has now come fully into its own. Hundreds of Germans are learning to fly. At Johannisthal Leipzig, Munich, Mayence, Frankfort weimar, Teltow, and Mulhausen where the most important training camps are maintained, the utmost activity and enthusiasm prevail. In the Army airmanship has become almost a passion. Many more young officers are volunteering for the new arm than the War Office can possibly use. Army orders for aeroplanes are rapidly putting the construction industry on a sound commercial basis. If the Reichstag were suddenly to pass a huge 'aerial programme,' it would find that the plant exists capable of carrying it out. There is talk in official circles of a scheme of Government subsidies for privately owned aeroplanes, such as now exists with regard to motor-cars. If this project should materialise, Germany will become possessed of an air fleet which need not fear a brush with the most powerful rival." The German Army Estimates for 1913 provide for $20,000 of additional funds for the Verkehrstruppen, which include the flying arm. It is believed that the lion's share of this increase is destined for the expansion of the aeroplane fleet and for the creation of "flying garrisons" at strategic points on the frontiers.

He Pleaded Both Ways.

Sheridan Master, former speaker of the Michigan house of representatives, tells the following story of one of his early cases as a lawyer:

A negro was arrested for stealing a calf and the court appointed Mr. Master to defend him. The colored man had never talked to a lawyer before and didn't fancy the idea very much, preferring to try the case himself.

After a short conference between Mr. Master and the negro the court asked the negro how he would plead. The latter rose slowly and said:

"Jedge, your honoh, I pleads not guilty on advice of my attorney, but I ain't got no faith in any attorney; so, I'll tell you, jedge, dat I done stole de calf and I throws myself on de mercy of de court."—Richmond Times Dispatch

GAMBLER TO A MILLIONAIRE

Wonderful Rise of a Nevada Man Who Broke "The Bank" With Senator's Money.

From a gambler to a millionaire mining man, politician, probable president of four banks, and on record as having refused a United States senatorship is the brief history of George Wingfield, according to the New York Tribune.

The story which was current in the early days of the Tonopah and Goldfield district was that Wingfield in the pioneer period of the Tonopah camp came out of a gambling house one evening and stood with a despondent look on his face, when the late Senator Nixon came along. The senator greeted George, as he was popularly known, and asked how his luck was. Wingfield replied that he was broke. Nixon handed him some gold and said:

"Try again, George," and passed on.

That money turned the trend of fortune and Wingfield broke the bank and became owner of the gambling house. From that time on his success seemed to be assured. He secured from the prospectors various mining claims, including large interests in the leading mines in the Goldfield district, and as evidence of his appreciation for the help of Nixon he gave the late senator an interest in all his holdings.

After the senator's death Wingfield was offered the Nevada senatorial toga, but he refused it. It is stated, however, that he will be the next president of the banks which Senator Nixon headed, Winnemucca, Carson, Reno and Tonopah.

Signs of the Times.

"There is every indication that hard times are approaching," said Mayor Shank. "I married two couples in one day, and there are a large number of auction sales these days. Two of the surest signs that hard times are coming are a large number of weddings and auction sales. Hard times make my business (auctioneer) good. When times are hard there are lots of sales, and of course I get my commission."—Indianapolis News.

MAORIS BECOMING WEALTHY

Former Canadian Tells of New Zealand Aborigines

An exceedingly interesting talk on New Zealand was given in Toronto by Mr. George McCaul, a well-known public citizen of that country.

Mr. McCaul was born in this country, but emigrated to Galt, New Zealand, when very young. He said that many of the Maoris were educated and highly cultured. Some were men of wealth, and their estates were larger than those of the white intruders.

Big in Stature and Name

Commissioner J. E. Starr of the Toronto Juvenile Court helped to reinforce the Bulgarian army when he sent Theophilus Brecedicioueki, a youthful Bulgar, to the only Bulgarian priest in the Queen City, for the purpose of having him shipped back to his native country to join the army.

The young Bulgar with his long name, is but fifteen and a half years old, but stands six feet tall and weighs about 170 pounds. He was charged with stealing a pair of scissors and the case was proved against him. The boy was unwilling to enlist and return home.

Perjury Denounced

In trying a case at Hamilton Judge Monck said that in Division Court cases most of the evidence was perjured, and it was difficult for Judges to make decisions. "There is altogether too much perjury, and I am going to stamp it out,' he announced. "I think every member of the Bar should do all in his power to prevent perjury, and if a lawyer knows a witness is committing perjury, he should publish the fact."

DEMORALIZED.

John Kendrick Bangs, writing in Municipal Ownership, says that the splendid City of Detroit is in a state of demoralization on the subject of public ownership.

He says that the virus has taken hold of the city to such an extent that they take pride in a public omnibus line that has carried sixty-seven thousand passengers in less than a month, and has cost $1400 more than it has taken in during less than twice as many days. That is a deficiency at the rate of over $20,000 a year made up, of course, from the general taxpayer.

But Detroit must be satisfied until the city has gone the whole round of experiment which long ago was made in more than one city with instructive results.

No city of any importance in any country has yet solved the problem of running public business with the economy of running a private business. That is why municipalities given over to public ownership on a large scale find themselves staggering soon under an immense load of debt.

"I Sleep Soundly, Feel Like New"

ALL WHO LACK VIGOR, THOSE WHO ARE DISPIRITED AND WORN OUT SHOULD READ THIS CAREFULLY

Proof That Health and Renewed Vitality Quickly Return When Right Remedy is Used.

"I am only thirty years old, yet for almost two years I have felt more like seventy-five. I have found it difficult to sleep at night, and in the morning felt so depressed and heavy that effort was difficult. My hands were always clammy and perspiration on slight effort would break out all over me. It was not unnatural that I should begin to brood over the chance that I should be unfit to do my work, and this dread made my sleepless nights perfect misery. After repeated trials of medicines and mixtures, Dr. Hamilton's Pills gave me the first gleam of hope. From the very first I could see they were different in action from other pills. They didn't gripe and acted as naturally as if nature and not the pills were cleansing my clogged-up system. My spirits rose. I felt much better. The sluggish action of the system gave way to normal activity. Dizziness and headaches ceased, appetite, good color and ambition to work returned, and have remained. I am like a new man, and I thank Dr. Hamilton's Pills for it all."

This was the experience of J. E. Parkhurst, a well known grocery dealer in Jefferson. Follow his advice, use Dr. Hamilton's Pills for your stomach, kidneys and liver, and you'll enjoy long life and robust good health. All druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, 5 boxes for $1.00, or postpaid from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

CONSUMPTION "CURES"

Without including any specific mention of Dr. Friedmann who now stand pretty completely discredited in both this country and Germany, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has issued a bulletin that is of special interest at this time. Declaring with emphasi that no cure for consumption has yet been discovered, "except the well-tried hygienic dietetic method of fresh air, rest, and good food," it says that within the past five years, no less than 500 fraudulent "cures" for consumption have been tried on the people of this country. Many thousands of sufferers, hoping against hope, have been victimized: none of them have been helped, and many have been hurried into their graves.

The exploiters of the nostrums have reaped a clear harvest of at least $50,000,000. Of course this is the worst kind of thievery. It is blood money, taken from the poor, the ignorant and the credulous. There are ample laws to prevent this form of fraud, national laws and state laws, and there may well be a campaign of better enforcement. Less expensive, to be sure, but equally useless and often harmful are some of the home-made "cures," against which the bulletin issues a Rarning. These "cures" include onions, lemons, coal smoke, pig's b,ood, alcohol, dog oil, goat's milk, clabbered milk, teas of various kinds, etc. Many of these things have their place, but not as a means of restoring a consumptive to health.

The victim of tuberculosis is the most hopeful person in the world, and naturally enough he grasps at any straw. All the worse, then, the crime of those who sell him useless and harmful drugs or treatments. The extent to which this fraud is practiced shows the need of more educational work as to the value of pure air and good food, which, with rest, are thus far the only know things that will arrest the course of the dread disease. Much has been coomplished through these simple agencies in the world-wide fight against tuberculosis, but there remains much more to be done.

THE YAWNING CURE FOR TIRED NERVES

Said to be a Splendid Method of Relaxation and a Sleep Producer

We were all brought up with the idea that it is bad manners to yawn. Now we are told that yawning is the latest cure for "nerves." Yawning, it is claimed, is a preventive as well as a cure for this so-called "disease." It prevents the feeling of restlessness which is said to be the main cause of nerves.

If you get into the habit of yawning morning and night in the right way, so that there is absolute relaxation of the muscles, the effect is remarkable.

If you feel irritable, strung up, with every nerve on edge, suggest to yourself that you must yawn and a sense of relief and contentment awakens. You feel rested after two or three attempts. If you are tired out, yawn absolutely relaxing, and give yourself to the exercise, and the effect is as if you had a restful doze.

If you are suffering from headaches try practising yawning. In the first stage it is said to be a certain cure. If you are one of the people who get depressed try yawning.

Its Beneficial Effect

Now, there is something in the idea. Apart altogether from the effect upon the muscles, yawning clears the lungs, draws fresh air down into the lungs, which purifies the blood, reacting upon the nervous system. Fatigue and depression are both dependent upon poisoned blood and two or three real good yawns provide a splendid tonic and stimulant to the nervous system without any danger of depression.

Then yawning by stretching the muscles and the relaxation it produces is excellent. The movement provides a sort of internal massage. It is also recommended as a cure for obesity. If you are too stout, yawn. And if you are too thin yawning will do you good in that it improves the appetite and counteracts that tendency to worry which so often affects people who are thin.

Make It a Habit

One deep single yawn is good in itself, but two or three minutes devoted to the exercise several times a day produces quite a remarkable effect.

First suggest to yourself that you are very tired, that nothing but yawning will rest you, and you make a beginning. One yawn leads to another, because yawning is catching, as everybody knows.

If you sleep badly practice yawning and relaxation for a few minutes before you get into bed, breathing deeply and quietly between the yawns and thinking only of how tired you feel when you begin to yawn.

Thus the brain is not allowed to become tense and strung up, and the right condition for restful sleep is quietly induced, the patient's mind being taken up with yawning, which is the natural precursor of sleep.

ORIENTAL COURTESY

When husband and wife go traveling together, in the Orient, the man walks in front, careless and free, and the woman walks behind, carrying the bundle. Therefore you say, "The Oriental cares not for his women; he despises his wife and uses her as a beast of burden." Most Occidentals never get further than that. But if you are observant you go out in the jungle yourself, and you discover things. When you walk abroad there are difficulties and dangers. The paths are overgrown and thorny, creepers must be cut back, there are cattle and buffaloes to be driven off, and buffaloes are ugly creatures; there are snakes. In the villages are village dogs which snarl and snap. You are a man, yet you will be glad of some one to go in front of you with a hatchet to clear your way. No woman would walk in front, and the man must be free. Now you see the reason why the man walks in front. If you want to confirm it, you enquire and find that this is true. Thus the Japanese, the Burman, goes in front of his wife for the same reason that the Occidental goes behind—from courtesy. If he continues to do so when it is unnecessary, as in towns where there are roads, it is because a convention once formed is hard to break—east or west.

AN ETOMOLOGIST

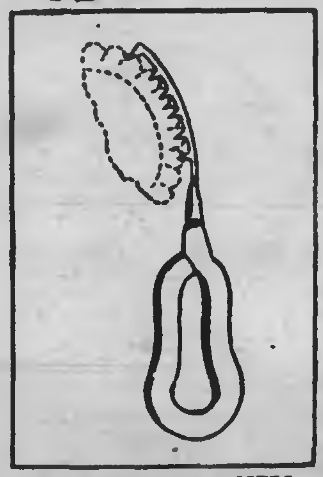
A Yorkshireman's Success in Rearing Butterflies

One of the best-known entomologists in Yorkshire is Mr. H. W. Head, who now lives on his butterfly farm at Burnston, near Scarborough, but who did all his pioneer work while residing in Scarborough. Mr. Head was the first to breed the butterfly in captivity, and to-day he owns the largest butterfly farm in the British Isles, covering between three and four acres, mainly devoted to the breeding of butterflies and moths. In the rearing of hybrids Mr. Head has been remarkably successful. He has raised altogether well on to a dozen, and he recently showed specimens of a yellow form of the green-veined white butterfly the sale price of which is about $7.30 each. But what he is always on the look-out for are "sports," that is, butterflies or moths of well-known types, but differently marked than the ordinary. There is a good demand for these, and a single specimen will fetch pounds. It is all a matter of luck. Since he has been in the business Mr Head has tried to breed a black variety of the tiger moth but he has not succeeded. At the haven live butterflies are not supplied. The live stock does not go beyond the caterpillar, or the fertile eggs of any particular kind of butterfly or moth in stock; but his clientele is cosmopolitan and world wide in extent. A jet black butterfly valued at $5,000, as big almost as a robin, with wings measuring 11½ inches from tip to tip, was brought to London from New Guinea by A. L. Mock, an explorer in the service of Hon. Walter Rothschild, millionaire owner of the famous private museum at Tring Park. Several new varieties of butterflies, by far the largest in the world, were discovered in New Guinea by Mock. "I had to take up from the coast," he says, "cases of pearl shell, tomahawks and beads of all kinds before I could get the assistance of the natives in capturing the butterflies. The natives shoot them with four-pronged arrows which they use for killing birds. The female giant butterflies are black or brown or white, but the males are splendidly marked in green or gold. I brought back also with me a butterfly which has a hairy body, on account of the intense coldness of the Snow Mountains. A couple of my native boy hunters were killed and eaten by New Guinea cannibals, who kindly sent me back the bones."

SCRAPES CORN OFF COB

Curved Blade With Teeth Scrapes Corn Out Sideways

An ingenious little device for removing corn from the cob has been patented by an Illinois man. A piece of wire is bent at one end to form a handle and the projecting stem flattened to form a thin, curved blade. Portions of this blade are cut through and bent downward, to form a series of teeth which extend the length of the concave side of the blade. By drawing this scraper around the cob through each row of kernels the substance is neatly removed. While it is scarcely likely that this implement will cut corn from a cob as rapidly as some other devices, it nevertheless has this advantage over most of the others—it will not put the fingers in jeopardy. With most corn scrapers one is apt to scrape the skin off her fingers as well as get the corn off the cob.



NO SCRAPING OF FINGERS

Gun Shoots Gases

Instead of bullets a new German gun shoots a combination of gases which temporarily blind and choke a victim, enabling him to recover later.

Effect of Cold on Cat's Fur

A remarkable transformation of a cat's fur by temperature has been reported. A black cat was accidentally shut in the refrigerating chamber of a mail steamer in Sydney harbor, and was not discovered until about thirty-two days later, when the ship was off Aden.

The cat was scarcely recognizable, the fur having become long and thick, changing to white on the back. Brought out into the intense heat of the Red sea, the heavy white coat rapidly fell out and the normal coat was restored.

Umbrella Device

A combination lock that encircles the handle of an umbrella and prevents it being opened by any person ignorant of the combination is the invention of a London cafe coat room attendant.

New Sewing Machine

A sewing cabinet capacious enough to hold everything a seamstress may need in her work yet which folds up like a screen and can be carried by handles on one side has been invented by a Missourian.

BRICK AND COAL COMPANY, LTD.

Incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act.
NO PERSONAL LIABILITY

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL - $500,000.

Consisting of
$200.000. 7 Per Cent Preferred at $10.00 Per Share, with Bonus of 25 per cent Common. $300.000 Common at $10.00 per share

DIRECTORS:

J. S. DOUGLAS, Merchant, Winnipeg.
W. F. TALLMAN, Street Commissioner, Winnipeg.
A. B. WOOLDRIDGE, Gentleman, Winnipeg.
D. W. McKERCHAR, Barrister, Winnipeg.
V. A. TALBOT, Real Estate Broker, Winnipeg.

The above Company has purchased from the Excelsior Coal and Brick Co., Ltd., their whole plant as a going concern, the purchase price to be taken in shares of the new Company, and it is the intention of the Directors to equip the plant to make it one of the largest in the West.

The plant is situated in that rich tract of mineral producing country surrounding Estevan, and is near the town. It comprises 640 acres of the best clay and coal to be found anywhere.

The shaft of the coal mine has been sunk to a depth of seventy feet to reach a seam of the best lignite coal, and there are enough entries and passages to enable an output, at slight expense, of 200 tons of coal per day. Other mines in the district are producing less and making considerable profit. A conservative estimate of the profit on each ton is $1.00, but from Government borings near the property it has been shown that there is a seam of coal 650 feet from the surface which is similar to the Lethbridge coal, and which could be sold f.o.b. the mine for at least $5.00 per ton, netting the Company $3.50 per ton. It is to reach this seam and further equip the brick plant that the issue of stock has been made.

There is a constant and ever-increasing demand for brick. At the present moment the price for common brick all over the West is from $12.50—$13.00 per thousand. The clay on our property is of the finest, and makes a brick second to none. We can make bricks for about $4.00 per thousand, so that the profit on the product is considerable. It is the intention of the Company to increase the present brick plant to allow of an output of from 75,000—100,000 common bricks per day, and at least 25,000 pressed bricks, which retail at $25.00 per thousand and cost about $7.00 to produce.

Under the coal there is a strata of fireclay, which is extremely scarce in Canada, and commands a high price. It is intended to instal a machine for the making of fire brick, which is being almost entirely brought from the United States and Scotland; also to manufacture sewer pipes and hollow tiles. Firebrick and hollow tiles command the high price of $40.00 per thousand, and we can make them for less than $8.00.

Coal and brick run in conjunction is probably the finest profit-making combination known. It has been proven over and over again that with competent management such a proposition is a success from the first.

The Directors have insured the success of the new Company by engaging the services of one of the most expert brick men in the West, who will supervise the laying out and working of the new plant.

It is with unbounded faith in the future of this western country that the Directors have decided on offering to the public a share in its development and wealth. The man who invests in this proposition makes a two-fold investment. He invests and aids in the development of his country, and at the same time puts his capital to profitable use.

SPORTING NEWS

GOLF.

Hanover, N.H., July 15.—President Wilson played on the Dartmouth College links again to-day. He has found the course to his liking. Its hilly character hives him plenty of exercise in the brisk mountain air.

Mr. Wilson, who took up golf less than two years ago became so fond of the game that he adopted it for his regular exercise. According to those who have been watching his play here, he gives promise of becoming an expert.

TENNIS.

Nottingham, Eng., July 15.—Crowds of lawn tennis enthusiasts reached here to attend the semi-final round to be played here between teams representing the United States and Germany in the preliminary contests for the selection of a team to challenge England for the Dwight F. Davis international trophy.

ATHLETICS.

Chicago, July 15.—The committee which had charge of the international games held in Grant Park, faces a deficit of 115,000, it became known to-day.

Everett C. Brown, one of the managing committee, attributed the principal loss to the failure of the polo tourney which had been planned He said the committee figured on receipts of $10,000 from the polo tournament.

BASEBALL.

Lynn, Mass., July 15.—Pitcher Harrington of the Lynn Club, has been sold to the Cincinnati Reds for a reported price of $4,000. Harrington was developed by Patsy Flaherty former National League pitcher.

New York, July 15.—Christy Matthewson, novelist and star pitcher of the New York Giants, is putting in his spare time this summer, such as it is, to the task of collaborating with Mrs. Rida Johnson Young on a play which will have baseball for its principal theme and which will be called "Fair Play."

One of Mrs. Young's most successful pieces was "Brown of Harvard," in which Henry Woodruff was starred several seasons.

When James J. Corbett was the champion heavyweight boxer he was particularly clever in avoiding blows. When John J. McGraw played third base for the champion Orioles he knew how to dodge wildly pitched balls. Corbett and McGraw sat in a private box behind the Giants' bench at Ebbets Field the other day. In the eighth innings Red Smith of the Brooklyns sent a hot foul whizzing against the upper tier. The ball glanced off and made a bee line for Corbett and McGraw, who raised their arms to shield their heads and ducked under the flying pellet. Great applause!

BRIDE OF A MONTH

Farmer's Son Goes to College and Weds City Girl Who Makes Good.

By AUGUSTUS GOODRICH SHERWIN.

"She won't do, Silas," said Mrs. Green in a positive tone—"she won't do at all."

"I'm afraid not," answered her husband with a doleful shake of the head. "I reckon John has made a dreadful mistake. Not that the poor little thing has a lazy bone in her body. She's bright, chipper and accommodating, but it's all the wrong way."

"Yes, working embroidery and training roses don't count like milking and making butter," observed the practical housewife. "There's Ellen, now. She's worth her weight in gold at the churn."

"And Mary," added the old farmer. "Why, that girl just makes fun of pitching hay."

Ellen was the wife of James Green, and Mary had married his brother, Ethan. They were great strapping fellows, both of them, and their wives mated them. The old farmer had declared they had showed rare common sense in selecting helpmates who knew how to earn their living.

"It's all come of John going to college," mourned the old man. "He came back with his crazy scientific farming ideas, and a little doll of a thing who never wet her fingers in the way of work."

The "little doll of a thing," Madge Green, the bride of a month, was at that very moment crying as if her heart would break, in a vine embowered corner of the front porch. She had heard every word spoken by the farmer and his wife.

Madge Was in His Arms Sobbing Out Her Pitiful Story.

It was not the first time that Madge had learned that these rough but honest-hearted people considered her entirely out of her natural element. She had come to Willow Farm in good faith, and had tried to be happy and helpful. Mrs. Green had laughed at her, however, when she got up a meal composed of really exquisite dainties, but a mere incidental mouthful to hungry seekers after corn beef and cabbage, and lots of it. The farmer had regarded her with real sympathy, when he found her pretty hands all scraped and cut from shelling corn for the chickens.

"I won't be a nobody, even here!" exclaimed Madge, after a good crying spell. "I love John, and his folks, too. I'm going to learn how to please them, no matter how hard it seems."

It was this sudden resolve that led to a vast surprise on the part of bluff, hearty John Green half an hour later, as he came round the corner of the barn to face a most amazing scene.

Madge, wearing a long apron and all flurried and excited, was stamping her foot at a cow. The animal was swinging her tail and pawing the ground. Behind the cow lay a cream pitcher in pieces.

"Why, little girl, what does this mean?" challenged the big-hearted fellow.

In an instant Madge was in his arms and sobbing out her pitiful story.

"It's no use, John," she wailed. "I wanted to learn how to milk, just like Ellen and Mary. That hateful old mooley wouldn't let me, and kicked the pitcher to pieces. Oh, John, I'll never be of any use for anything."

John Green had to laugh at the absurd situation. Then, all manly tenderness, he stroked the golden hair of his young and pretty wife.

"You poor little angel," he said, "nobody is going to hurt you, and nobody could dislike you. I didn't bring you here to wear out those dear little hands. All you have got to do is to be the sunshine of the house, which you are, until I convince father and mother that farm life is something better than humdrum slaving. When I come to show them the profits from my scientific farming on that eighty-acre field father gave me to experiment with, there'll be a grand change in ideas, mark me. All you have got to do is to be patient, dear. Everything will come out all right."

There were a good many changes at Willow Farm inside of a few weeks.

James Green caught the Texas fever. Ethan had a chance to superintend an immense Dakota farm. It was rather lonely after they left. Then Mrs. Green was taken down with rheumatism. A week later the farmer broke a limb in a runaway accident, and the doctor prescribed invalid treatment for both.

That was where John Green came in strong. Madge, too. Most of the heavy farm work was out of the way, and John managed to run things with little extra help. There were real cozy, enjoyable evenings for the young married couple. Old Mrs. Green limped around and bore the main burden of meal getting. With husky working appetites out of the way, however, she was surprised to find in how many useful ways Madge was fitting herself into the work. John helped Madge wash the dishes, and after a week or two of grumbling Mrs. Green confessed one evening that things were "real comfortable."

"Little girl," said John one day, when Madge proudly showed him the result of her bread baking, "this work is coming pretty heavy on you."

"Oh, John," declared Madge, "I love it."

"I was thinking that perhaps we had better induce the old folks to settle in town and give up the farm—they can afford it."

"Oh, John! give up the dear old home? Don't think of it," pleaded Madge. "We are getting along splendidly. Why, I heard father say to mother yesterday that the little delicacies I made for him were making him well faster than the doctor's medicine. Then mother said I was the best nurse in the world. Think of it—poor little me!"

That evening, after Madge had given them some music on the piano, John drew a paper from his pocket covered with figures.

"Father," he said, "there are the returns from the eighty-acre field. I find that my 'scientific nonsense' as you call it, has brought in more than all the rest of the farm put together, with half the usual help."

"John," exclaimed the old man, after staring stupidly at the paper, "it's like a dream!"

"Stubborn facts, father," declared John, cheerily. "Now I've got a proposition to make. You and mother have worked hard enough for one lifetime. Let me run the farm. Madge will get a strong hired girl to do the rough work."

"If my own little efforts only suit!" broke in Madge wistfully.

"Suit!" cried the old man. "Why, say, this broken limb of mine has just been luxury with the fine feeding you've given me. And, look at me—all perked up with the collar and apron you made. Why, last night I caught her humming over one of those old time tunes you play for us, just like she used to when she was a young girl."

Mrs. Green reached over to Madge and pulled her towards her. She drew the fair face down to her own and kissed her softly, her eyes humid and grateful.

"Yes, Madge is a jewel," she said.

"She is better than that!" cried old Farmer Green—"she's a household angel."

TRAINING CHILDREN

Pampering Them Bound to Result in Unhappiness

Price Collier, a writer who is somewhat discontented with existing conditions, says that "The infallible recipe for making a child unhappy is to give it everything it wants in the way of material things and never thwart its will."

In the management of children, people have rushed to extremes. Children have been flogged, snubbed, thwarted. Children have been pampered. Children have been neglectd and allowed to go their own way. All these extremes should be avoided.

A child needs friendly advice and guidance, but not meddling interference. Its originality, its individuality, its desire to have its own way, should be respected, so long as these do not permanently injure the child or violate the rights of others. As a general rule, what is called a spoiled child is one who has been allowed to disregard the rights of others. Such a child is the beginning of the unjust or selfish man or woman.

A child should neither be snubbed nor encouraged to "show off." Its opinions should not be suppressed; nor should they be held up as evidences of marvelous wisdom. They should be received gravely and courteously, and considered upon their merits.

One of the most charming of experiences is to watch a child amusing itself, and working in its own little world, without any desire to attract the attention of its elders. The elders should not "butt in" until they see that the child is surely going wrong. Children do not require either correction or pampering nearly as much as we older people imagine. Neglect may be carried too far. But there is such a thing as "wise and salutary neglect."

WASTE IN THE HOME

Penny Wise and Pound Foolish Methods Too Much in Vogue

There is a great deal of talk about the waste which constantly occurs in the household. Housewives, some critics assert, do not understand the fundamental principles of economy. Waste which would never be tolerated in the running of a big business goes on in the homes of the land every day. Yet some housekeepers waste their lives over petty economics—economics which may save a few cents, but which waste much time, health and strength.

In a big rubber factory there was a chemist, who thought that he could obtain sulphur, which is needed in the manufacturing carried on in this plant, from old rubber. The sulphur used cost a few cents a pound. The chemist finally perfected a method of extracting sulphur from the old rubber and he submitted his method to the factory heads. It was a perfect method. The sulphur was perfect sulphur. But the method necessitated the expenditure of a couple of dollars for every pound of sulphur saved. And the factory heads, remembering that sulphur cost only a few cents a pound, refused to consider the young man's plan.

It is just this sort of wasteful economy which goes on in some households—and which should be condemned much more energetically than the actual waste that occurs. A certain housewife heard that dried potato parings made excellent kindling for fires; and she spent an appreciable amount of time each day rescuing the skins from oblivion and spreading them out so that they could dry properly.

The woman who knows how to distinguish between real wastefulness and expenditures for legitimate needs is the really good housewife.

For Biliousness

The juice of a lemon will cure biliousness. It is far cheaper and simpler than the quinine or calomel route. And there is the great advantage that it does not injure the system, nor leave any ill effects in any of the organs of the body.

Many people know that it is wise to take the juice of a lemon in half a glass of water before breakfast.

Many do not know that the effect is much better if the treatment is repeated just before retiring at night.

The plain lemon, eaten, may be strong in acid for some people. But diluted in water it is not likely to be harmful in any way.

The lemon juice acts as a general corrective to the system and is a direct aid to the proper activity of the liver.

How to Make Briquettes

The following is a French recipe, and now that fuel is so dear, the thrifty housewife—or the husband, perhaps—may be glad to have it. Take coaldust—preferably anthracite as it burns longer—65 per cent., saw dust 25 per cent., and coal tar 10 per cent. Mix well, form into balls, and let them dry before using.

READING GLASS

Adjust It Once and It is Always in the Correct Focus

One objection to a reading-glass—an objection that some people say offsets its other virtues—is the fact that it is impossible for the person holding it to keep it always in the same focus. An Illinois man has overcome this by inventing a glass that need only be adjusted once and remains correctly focused. Then lens of this glass is rectangular, and at each of the upper corners is a movable leg. By means of screws these legs may be adjusted to hold the glass at the requisite distance from the page of the book or magazine or whatever it is the user is reading. By resting the lower ends of the legs on the page and moving them as desired, the reader is sure of having the same focus all the time, which is much easier on his eyes than if it was changed every few instants.

OLD SOLDIER RETURNS HOME

Pioneer of Winnipeg, Who Fought in Many Wars of the Empire, Goes Back to Little Scottish Village

Winnipeg lost one of her pioneers in the departure for the "Land o' Cakes" of Captain John McKay, who was for many years in the service of the Dominion Government prisons branch. "Jack" McKay was a resident of Manitoba for upward of 33 years and can tell tales of stirring times around Fort Garry. A soldier for almost a whole lifetime, Captain John stands straight and sturdy and carries his 83 years with a mien of a man of 60 years. In fact, he says people believe him to be fabricating when he tells them his age, so young does he look.

Prior to his departure, Mr. McKay said he was looking forward with great delight to seeing his old home again in the little village of New Galloway, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland.

Prior to coming to Canada Captain McKay saw service in the British army, taking part in the Turkish and Crimean campaigns. On his breast he still wears a faded, yet nevertheless highly treasured ribbon, the various colors of which denote the engagement in which he has taken part. In his pocket he carries several medals. Chief among these is a Crimean medal. Attached to the Crimean medal are four bars inscribed respectively, Sebastapol, Alma, Inkermann, and Balaclava. In these four battles Captain John saw active fighting, and as his memory is undimmed by the years his eyes sparkle as he recounts anecdotes of the campaign.

When asked if he regretted leaving Canada and if he would come back, Captain McKay said he hardly regretted leaving this country in view of the greater joy in seeing his old home again. He said it was hardly to be expected that he would come back again.

PASSING OF SUNDAY SUPPER

Chafing Dish Messes Now Seem Largely to Comprise the Sabbath Evening Repast.

Time was when the Sunday night supper was of even more vital importance than the midday dinner, especially in those towns and villages where strict religious principles prohibited cooking on the Sabbath.

It was not considered wrong to mix a pan of biscuits the night before and bake them for supper, so that these hot, puffy features of the meal, with honey or some of mother's quince preserves or canned cherries, were looked forward to with joyous anticipation.

As time passed, the stringent line relaxed as far as cooking for supper was concerned, and, in addition to cold salads, there would always be some hot dish, such as the real old-fashioned hash or scrambled eggs, with creamed potatoes.

City life has changed all this. Even the suburbanite who apes city ways has the mahogany table cleared, the doilies used in place of the regulation dinner cloth, and the chafing dish placed in front of the hostess, the ingredients at hand, and the lamp trimmed and burning. From this she turns out creamed chicken and ham, deviled sardines, mutton ragout and other "messes"—her grandmother would call them, as she waxes reminiscent on the honey and hot biscuit era.

MARRIAGE TOO EASY

Detroit Judge up in Arms Against Gretna Green Methods

Judge Codd of Detroit who is determined to put a stop to the easy manner in which Windsor marriages are dissolved made the announcement from the Bench that hereafter the decree in such cases will be held up thirty days for investigation of the marriage, and, unless it is found the couple cannot live together again, the decree will not be granted.

The Judge was moved to his declaration against the "Windsor marriage bureau" because of the large number of complaints filed in the Detroit Divorce Court, the principals in which declared they had been wedded in Windsor and then parted after a few weeks.

AN OLD ROCKING CHAIR

E. J. Corwin, of Niagara Falls, Ont., has in his possession an old-time rocking chair which was presented to him by an old lady friend. She claimed at the time ofpresentation that the at the time of presentation that the General Sir Isaac Brock had rocked in it. Mr. Corwin prizes the chair very highly as a relic. On making some repairs and in removing the varnish he discovered the maker's stamp, plainly engraved on the inside of one of the rockers, and the date 1712, so this old chair has passed its two hundredth anniversary.

Grinding Pulp-Wood

A study made of methods of making the paper for newspapers or magazines by grinding up wood on a grindstone, in the government laboratory at Madison, Wis., showed that a dull stone will make the best paper. The grindstone grinds the wood into wood pulp. If it is rotating in thick pulp, the pulp, water, and stone are kept hot; if it is revolving in water, the wood is ground in the cold. Before grinding, the log is always kept in steam for a few hours.

Green wood gives a paper of a much better color than seasoned wood, and the upper is stronger if the wood is steamed before it is ground than when it is ground in the natural state.

SET OUT TO PLEASE CRANKS

Clerk Who Gained Good Will of Difficult Customers Deserved Promotion That Followed.

"Anybody can hold the trade of a good-natured customer," said the superintendent of a large mercantile establishment to a new clerk. "It's the man who can please the cranks and chronic kickers whom we want and who will find himself in line for promotion."

The new clerk remembered. He set himself to please difficult customers, the ones who like to complain and will find an opportunity to do so no matter how good the service and merchandise. "I realized," he says, "that their money is just as good as the next man's, though it may be more difficult to get."

It was not long before the obliging clerk had built up a personal trade, so that critical customers would ask for him on entering the shop. They liked to be waited on by one whom they knew desired to please. Often they became much less crochety.

The superintendent was as good as his word. When the value of the new man's services became apparent, as it inevitably did, the promised promotion was not long delayed.

No One to Take the Bet.

There are lots of things worse than living for a week at the detention home, in the opinion of little Johnnie, a little orphan, who has known about nine years of life in the ways of the city streets. He made that institution his home for about a week at the order of Judge Taylor of juvenile court, pending the finding of a permanent home for him by the board of children's guardians.

During his stay there he gained nine pounds. He was a different boy on the day of his discharge, compared with the hungry, shiftless lad that went in.

"Did you eat lots of bread and molasses at the detention home, Johnnie?" he was asked in juvenile court.

"You bet," he answered, with a merry twinkle in his eye.—Indianapolis News.

"No; not much."

"And you're not twenty-five. Lord! Lord! What could hurt a man who doesn't drink and isn't twenty-five? Your case was not worth the ride, but perhaps we may have others," he added cheerfully, "now that old Khelowna has broken out."

As soon as the doctor's inspection was over, a council of war was held in the dining-room, whilst Jim and the doctor cut themselves vast chunks from the boiled salted beef on the table.

"Pity that the boys did not overhaul some of them," said Jim.

"Yes, it would have saved a hull lot of trouble," agreed Al. "we could have given them their medicine right there. Now we've got to take it to them."

"You think that we can't afford to leave things as they are," asked Rolt.

"I don't think about it. I hain't knowed Injuns since I growed grass high for nothing. When Injuns start on a racket of this kind, they've got to be wiped out or they'll come back like chickens to a doughnut. Ain't that so, Jim?"

But Jim was busy eating and listening. He was not much of a gas bag any way, the men said.

But at last even his appetite was appeased, and he turned from the men to the Boss.

"I'm afraid that it has got to be, Rolt. There are more Indians out than the boys think, and it's a vast deal more serious than I like. I saw two bands coming this way on my ride to Soda Creek. I met Khelowna and I'm afraid he has raised the whole country side."

"That's so," put in Al. "There ain't so much as an old klooch left at the rancherie since the burning."

"How do you know, Al?"

"I sent one of the breeds to prospect."

"Where is he?"

"He never came back. I didn't calculate as he would, but I thought he'd be better with them than with us if that was the kind of swine he was. Then I sent Dan here and he says they've all vamoosed. Don't you, Dan?"

"Every last hoof of them."

For a few moments there was a dead silence in the room, the men puffing quietly at their pipes and staring into the log fire. After so many years of undisturbed peace, it seemed impossible to believe in a general rising amongst B. C. Indians. It was almost as if the cattle had turned on the cowboys.

"What are we to do, Jim?"

"Well, Rolt, if these Indians were not Chilcotens, I should say that we had seen the worst of it and it would all blow over, but they are Chilcotens and Chilcotens are not like other Indians."

"Oh, them Coast Indians is like a pack of wet hens," put in Al. "These fellows are mean as wolves. They wiped out that survey part you Bella Coolas pretty clean."

"That was a long time ago, and all the ring-leaders were hanged."

"That's all you know, Boss. Khelowna was one of the ringleaders, and he wasn't hung, worse luck. None of the ring-leaders were hanged. The fellows they gave up were slaves, that's all. There wasn't a Chilcoten amongst them. Government knowed it, but couldn't do nothing."

"Do you remember, Doc, that smoke that I thought I saw late yesterday evening?" asked Jim.

"In the timber towards Grouse Creek?"

"Yes."

"I remember, but you don't think that that is where they are? If they had been there they would have seen us and cut us off."

"I'm not sure of that. They might have been scared that one of us would break back to Soda Creek. It would be safer for them to round us all up here at the ranch."

"You think that they have cut off our communications then?"

"With Soda Creek and Faircloughs; yes. That's what I'd try to do if I was in their place. Al's plan is the right one. We had better go after them. The first blow is worth a dozen later on, and it won't do to let them think we are scared, but we must leave a strong guard with you and the ladies."

"Yes, I mean to," said the Boss, waking up and taking command. "Pick your men to stay Combe."

"How would it be if the doctor, old Toma, two of the breeds, and the Fairclough boys stayed with you and Anstruther. I'm afraid about the Faircloughs. I doubt if they will ever get here."

"They're in the corral now. Won't believe a word about the rising, and think as we're scared at our own shadows."

"Go and bring them in, Al."

Al went out and returned presently with two fair-headed young Englishmen, beef-fed giants, with gaiters and other relics of the Old Country still clinging to them. Until now they had been looked upon with a certain amount of disfavor at the Risky as not belonging to quite the same class as most of the English importations and as intruders whose small hay meadow hardly justified their existence and the presence of their herd upon the range, but in the straits to which the Rolts had been reduced, the Faircloughs were accorded a very hearty welcome, although their obvious scepticism and too loudly proclaimed indifference to anything that "a pack of mangy Indians" could do, was a little trying to the old hands.

"The Chilcotens have not been near your place yet, Al tells me."

"No, sirree! I guess they know better," replied Bob Fairclough, handling a new Winchester with meaning.

"I hope so, indeed, Mr. Fairclough, and I daresay that we exaggerate the danger having ladies and an invalid to take care of. Would you mind staying with us for a day or two? Half of us are going out to try to round up Khelowna and his band, and your presence and your brother's would relieve the tedium of our absence for the ladies, and give them a greater sense of safety."

"Why, certainly. Delighted, I am sure, unless you would like to have us along with you and leave two of your men behind. Jack is a capital shot, you know, used to shoot at Wimbledon, and I can beat him a bit most times."

Rolt smiled at the ingenuous statement, but he wanted men who could hit something more difficult than a target at a measured two hundred yards from a rest. That style of shooting would do from the ranch windows, but if it came to shooting off-hand from the saddle, he preferred to trust some of his boys who had never heard of Wimbledon.

"Thank you, very much. But I think you must be content with the place of honor. It will be good to know that two such shots are watching over the ladies' safety. I'll take the trail to-night, Jim."

"Better let me go instead, Boss."

"One of us two must stay, Jim, and you have had your share of fun."

Jim hesitated, and prepared to argue.

"Besides, I don't want the wife to think that there is any serious danger, and if you stay behind she will not think so much of my going. She will argue that if there was anything really to be done I should take my best man with me. See?"

Finally it was arranged in this way, and in the dark, long after the ladies had retired to rest, Dick Rolt stood for a minute looking down at the face he loved, so white and calmly lovely in the moonlight.

It was too white, he thought, and then a hideous vision came to him of how that face might be when he next saw it.

"What a fool I am," he muttered to himself, "and all because a parcel of white livered Siwashes burned my stacks. Even that was rather heroic for them."

But when he reached over his horse's shoulder for Jim's hand, which he gripped hard, his voice had a queer ring in it.

"You won't let any harm happen to her, Jim."

"Not whilst I'm alive," and if "her" meant Polly to one man and Kitty to another it made no difference since the two were together.

Then Rolt turned away from the corrals and rode silently with his men through the night, believing that he had spared his wife the pain of parting and hidden from her the risk which he was running, not knowing, kindly fool that he was, that she had read him like a book; that her heart had yearned to him as he stood silently praying over her, marking but not guessing the cause of her paleness and that she, not he, was the one who had spared the other the pain of that which they knew could not be avoided.

A rancher's wife, like a soldier's, is obliged sometimes to take chances even with the life of her best beloved. If not there would be no ranching.

CHAPTER XIX.

"What is your programme, Al?" whispered the Boss, when the ranch lights had died out behind the hog's back.

"I was calculating to make for that gulch as leads into Grouse Creek. We could leave our horses there, and do a sneak down it to Khelowna's camp."

"How do you know he is camped there?"

"It's the nearest water to the place where Jim saw the smoke. He might not be there, of course, but it's worth trying. We might get the drop on the whole outfit if we did a good sneak at night."

"We might, as they won't dream of our assuming the offensive, but it isn't likely. They aren't white men and the woods talk."

"That's so, but if they spot us before we get the drop, it's only three to one. They'll run, sure."

That is the spirit of the West. Three to one is about a fair match in the eyes of the Western man, if the one is white, with rather heavy odds on the one, and history has proved that the handicap is not too heavy in most cases, although some "fool white," as Al would have put it, may sometimes "get left."

The Boss, at any rate, seemed satisfied, and the five went on silently in the darkness, which was of the kind which absolutely obliterates everything. A chinook wind was blowing, one of those curiously soft warm winds which occur in British Columbia, cutting the snow off the hills in a few hours like a red hot knife. By their ears they could tell when they were riding over prairie, for then there was only the whisper of the grass at their feet, or through timber, for then the soughing of the trees made weird music for them, but in that solid damp blackness you might have burst your eyeballs in trying to discover the outline of a pine, or the edge of the timber against the sky, and your efforts would have been in vain.

And yet with the instinct of a homing pigeon, old Al led them steadily on, never complaining of the darkness, never hesitating, or asking questions, and his companions felt their way after him, trusting implicitly to his guidance and to the instinct of their horses.

"Better get off here, Boss," Al said at last. "It's bad going. Hold on to your stirrup leather and let your horse come along after me," but he himself remained in the saddle.

It has to be more than bad going to persuade an old cowboy to foot it.

"Who's that blundering idiot?" he hissed a minute later as some one broke a stick, "can't you move your hoof without knocking the trees down. If they ain't deaf they'll hear that in Sody Creek bar."

Though the old man's language was more picturesque than accurate, a good many things seemed to have heard that unlucky stick. Until it broke, but for the solemn soughing of the trees, the dumbness of the woods had matched the darkness of the night. You would have thought that woods and prairie were alike untenanted, had you not remembered that all those who move in them by night, are stalking or stalked, seeking the life of another or shudderingly trying to save their own. As the stick cracked, there was a rustling in every bush, a stir in every tree, unseen feet pattered, unseen wings fluttered for a moment, and then again all was still,—listening.

As the five passed with all their senses on the alert, a tiny bright red star showed for a moment in the gloom ahead of, and above them.

"Gosh! I didn't know that we were that close," muttered Al. "If that fool hadn't have touched his fire I'd have blundered right into them. Lie low, boys."

For a quarter of an hour the five men lay motionless, and so still was everything that before the fifteen minutes had passed, the Boss felt convinced that the light which they had seen must have been born of their imagination. It could not be that there was any live thing in such a silence as that. But Al did not share in this feeling.

"It's a mercy none of the cayuses whinnied," he whispered, "but it won't do to trust them any longer. Let me git past you, Boss. Now foller me back. Go easy, and for the love of life, don't break any more trees, Dan," and so saying, he led them back by the way they had come.

At last he stopped. There had crept into the sky the faintest suspicion of light. Black darkness it would have appeared to most men still, but to those whose eyes had become accustomed to the utter dark it sufficed to show a hollow land.

"We'll tie the horses here, and wait a bit. When we can pretty nigh see our sights, we'll begin our sneak. They're a blanked sight nearer than I thought they was."

As he spoke his words were justified.

The black belt of gloom which surrounded the hollow in which they lay, was suddenly starred in a dozen places by quick red jets of flame, and the silence shattered by the ringing reports of as many rifles, after which the darkness came back again and the silence, but for the screaming of a wounded horse.

"Guess they beat us on the sneak," muttered old Al coolly. "Get into cover, boys, quick."

Probably no white man but Al could have led the ranch posse through those woods at night as silently as he had done. They had stirred no heavy beast to precede them and carry a warning to their foes. There had been no fluttering of disturbed wings in front of their advance, except that once; but a warning need not be printed in large type for an Indian to see it.

Ever since Dan "broke that tree" the stalkers had been stalked without suspecting it.

When the volley was fired Dick Rolt had had his eye on the exact spot in which one of the red stars of light had burst. He had heard the bullet sing past him, and for a fraction of a second had seen the prone figure of the man who fired the shot. But he had not replied to it.

The brilliance of the momentary flash had accentuated the darkness for him, and taken away from him all idea of locality, so that to have replied would only have been to waste a shot and betray his own hiding place.

He was lying now behind the dead horse waiting to snap at the next spit which should appear or to meet the rush which might have followed had the attacking party consisted of white men.

He had no notion how close his fellows were. He could not hear them nor see the outline even of the nearest bush. It was still pitch dark on the ground.

Suddenly a hand closed round his ankle, and a voice whispered.

"We've got to wriggle out of this. Don't lift your head, but just slew round on your belly and snake it after me. There's no hurry. I'll go slow."

"But the horses?" asked Rolt.

"Yours is dead, ain't it? If they want to shoot the others we can't stop 'em, blank them. Come," and Rolt who by this time had his head near old Al's heels, saw these draw quietly away from him.

Imitating his companion, Rolt squirmed on his belly through the bush which closed over him, so that it was only with the utmost difficulty and half by instinct that he managed to follow Al, of whose tortuous progress he could see but little, even when he was within arm's length of him.

He knew that he was going down hill, and that the ground under him was growing softer and softer, until at last he might almost as well have been swimming, but he could see nothing.

"We're all right now," Al stopped to whisper, just when Rolt was beginning to wonder whether he would not rather be shot than go on any farther.

"We're in the crik bottom."

"I could have guessed that."

Al gave a low chuckle.

"Pretty blanked cold, eh? Well, we'll cure that. We've got to move now like two-year-olds. Are you ready?" and he rose to a crouching position.

"Keep your head low till we're in the timber. Now come, and we'll beat them yet," and stooping as he ran the old frontiersman led his companion along the creek bottom under the shelter of its banks, into the heavy pine timber. There they threw themselves on the ground, soaked to the bone and panting heavily.

"What now? Are we going to fight them here?" asked Rolt at last, standing up to let some of the water drain out of him.

"Fight Injuns in timber? Not much. We've another five minutes before they'll miss us, but the light's coming. They're getting impatient. Hear that?"

"That" was another volley poured into the hollow.

"Hain't missed us yet, anyways. Are you good for another burst, Boss?"

"If it's not too far." Rolt's running days were over, and he was a heavy man, used to riding.

"No, it ain't far," and the old man began to run again as if he had been five and twenty, Toma and the other Indian loping along as easily as wolves, whilst Dan the big-footed, sobbed wearily far behind.

At last on the extreme edge of the pine belt, Al paused. Beyond the timber the open country rolled down towards the Fraser and the dawn had come.

"It's our only chance and a slim one. It's got to be that cherry patch," Al said, pointing out to the open. "There ain't another place in sight as would give us a show," and he set off running again at top speed for a little four-cornered patch of wild cherry bush, about a thousand yards from the timber.

Advent of Cheap Camera a Boon to Baby Worshippers

"The average baby of to-day," said the grandfather of one, "is as much pictured as royalty. I don't mean that this baby's picture gets into the newspapers as often as the Prince's does, but there are as many takes of it for home admiration.

"I can remember back to the time when far fewer pictures of babies were made, when the only pictures of anybody other than painted portraits, were those taken, in the old time daguerreotype galleries. To take a baby to one of these galleries was something of a task; and when you had got him there might not be awake, or he might not be good humored. In various ways this picture taking was an operation that might involve many difficulties; and then, besides, it cost money; and so in those old days if you managed to get four pictures of the baby in its first year you were doing very well.

"But now? Why, now, with the wonderful and inexpensive little modern hand camera with which pictures can be taken whenever the baby is in a happy mood, we take pictures of him in his first year almost daily, and in many situations.

"The baby is photographed at various ages held in the arms of its mother; in the arms of its father; and if, as may happily be, all its grandparents are living the baby is photographed held by each and every one of them. Also, it is photographed held in the arms of each of its aunts and uncles.

"And then the baby is photographed in all its various apparel; in its first short clothes; and with hat on and hat off; and in its carriage. When I come to consider the many times and occasions on which we take the baby's picture I am inclined to think that in that first year we take a hundred pictures of him."

A Good Appointment.

We are pleased to congratulate Mr. Johnston Greer on his new appointment on the Hydro-Electric. Mr. Greer has had an active experience of twenty-five years or twenty-six years in electrical work and certainly knows how such work should be done. It may be mentioned that Mr. Greer installed the first electric motors in the press rooms of the Examiner and the Review. And also the first motor with electrical fittings etc., in the Times Building. Mr. Greer installed, with unqualified satisfaction, the electric power system for Colborne in 1896. He is highly recommended, and the council is to be congratulated on giving the position to a local man well known to all, and eminently qualified to do the work.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Johnston, of this city.

The happy couple left for the West to spend their honeymoon. On their return to the city they will reside on Park street.

OTTER AND SALMON

Scotch Anglers Witness a Rare Battle in a River

Undoubtedly it will interest readers to hear of a rare, and rather unique, occurrence witnessed by a party of anglers fishing in the Blackwater, Ross shire. The party in question were fishing up the east side of the river, and crossed over Rogie Bridge and began fishing down the west side of the river, when they were rather startled by a strange commotion going on in the next pool, about 80 yards distant. They stood in amazement looking on at something rushing and splashing in circles at almost lightning speed, and could not very well say what it was, although a fish-tail would be seen at times, but eventually a salmon was seen struggling and kicking up the opposite bank. But the salmon had another fight for liberty, and got back into the water again, when practically the same evolutions were gone through, but towards the end getting feeble, and once more the salmon was taken ashore, when one of the party shouted, and the otter quietly slipped away. The fish was retrieved and examined very carefully which disclosed only a few scratches and one eye pierced. It turned the scales at only 5 pounds. One would have thought he would be 20 pounds at least to put up such a game fight. The otter's color assimilated so well with the surroundings, and the fish was so very dark that we could not see him distinctly.

Chinese Birdcages

Some of the antique Chinese bird cages, made of wood and intricately carved, are of great value and eagerly sought by collectors. Other Chinese cages are entirely of metal, with the pagoda shaped top and bands around the sides lacquered in brilliant colors and ornamented with human figures in relief and highly gilded. These are supposed to be appropriate to the popular French schemes of decoration, and are extremely quaint.

SARNIA'S MAYOR WILL APOLOGIZE

Had Refused Orangemen Use of Rooms in City Hall and Got Into Trouble

Sarnia, Ont., July 16.—Local afternoon papers will publish to-day an apology from the Mayor of Sarnia to the Orange Lodge for the treatment that they received here on Saturday, when the big celebration was held.

At that time the Mayor refused the Orangemen the use of the rooms in the City Hall and it is alleged later used abusive language to one James Cox, who was acting as marshal for the day.

The case was to come up in the court this morning, a summons having been issued for him yesterday for using insulting language. The lawyers got together on the case and the Mayor promised an apology to be published in the papers. The case has aroused considerable feeling in this section of the country.

ASKED FOR THE MEN WHO SAVED GEO. GRAY

Niagara Falls, Ont., July 16.—Within a few days of the circumstances attending the rescue of George Gray, of Toronto, one of the five survivors of the ill-fated canoe party that was caught in the gale on Lake Erie on Sunday, July 6th, will be presented to the Carnegie Hero Commission with a view of securing Medals and awards for the two youths who effected the rescue.

They were Joseph Cannon son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cannon, and Walter Franz, both of this city. That the rescue was one of the most daring ever attempted in these parts is admitted by all who witnessed it.

Great Feat in Frail Craft.

The boys launched their canoe after they had succeeded in making the shore with their companions, and paddled a half mile through combers that broke sometimes ten feet high, reached the almost exhausted man, balanced the frail craft, assisted him to climb in, and then with him stretched out in the boat, paddled back to shore.

TO REPLACE HOUSE OF LORDS BY ELECTED SENATE OF 150

Such is Said to be the Plan of Asquith Cabinet for Reform of Upper Chamber—Big Majority Against Home Rule Fails to Impress the Country

London, July 16.—Premier Asquith announced in the Commons yesterday that the Government will place before Parliament next session their proposals for reform of the House of Lords, and has been welcomed by both parties. The Liberals are heartily sick of the waste of time in Parliamentary proceedings under the Parliament Act with the reformed Lords. The Unionists are confident that the Government cannot formulate any scheme which will satisfy all sections of the Liberals, and confidently anticipate defeating the Government when the Lords reform bill is introduced. The Cabinet have guarded the secrecy of their proposed measure with great care

The Two Plans.

Two plans are known, however, to have many supporters in the Cabinet. The first is for a Senate directly elected by the people, Great Britain and Ireland being divided into seventy-five constituencies, each returning two members, the electorate being the same as for the House of Commons. Among members of the Cabinet who at one stage supported this was Sir Edward Grey, Lord Haldane, and Hon. Winston Churchill Another plan which is understood was described in a private meeting at the Eighty Club, a famous Liberal fighting organization, by Mr. Samuel, the Postmaster-General, is for a chamber much smaller than the present, partly elected, partly nominated, and restricted as the House of Lords now is regarding legislation sent up by the House of Commons.

BASEBALL

The Petes were defeated yesterday at Hamilton in a very fast and tightly played game with Notty Lee's team. Belting was the twirler and pitched whirlwind ball and held the Hamilton nine down pretty well. Trout did the catching and showed his old form. The score at the finish of the game was 2—1 in favor of Hamilton. Peterborough had four hits, while Hamilton had eight.

BABIES DIE FROM INHUMAN TREATMENT RECEIVED AT UNLICENSED FARM TORONTO

At Least Two Deaths Traced to Cruelty of Proprietors, Police Claim

Practices Exposed in Woman's Court—Magistrate Kingsford Turns Deaf Ears to Woman's Plea for Mercy

Toronto, July 16.—Statements that at least two recent deaths of infants in the city could be traced to the operations of the proprietors of baby farms in the city and allegations of most inhuman treatment and cruelty by the owners of such places were made in the Woman's Court this morning during the first of what the police promise will be a renewed series of trials of females charged with conducting unlicensed farms and maternity homes.

Many ugly stories have been in circulation regarding the operations of people of this nature of late and the recent abandonment of several infants in public places caused the police to take action. The result has been the appearance of a number of women in court of late. This morning four more faced Magistrate Kingsford and so sordid were the details related by the police that the court declared emphatically that baby farming and its attendant evils must be banished from the city at once.

"I am determined to put a stop to it," he declared angrily.

Kept Unlicensed Farm.

Mary Benning, 617 Delaware avenue, a middle aged, hard faced woman, was the first to be arraigned. She listened stolidly to the reading of the charge of keeping an unlicensed baby farm. Fifty dollars, and costs was the penalty, or thirty days imprisonment. The woman admitted that she accepted one of her charges from a drunken man and has no method of tracing its parents.

Miss Edith Rochester, of 56 Hickson street, was proved to have received $50 from the inhuman parents of one child which she kept a short time and then gave away. She does not know where it is now. Another of her charges died in the House of Providence where it was sent in a dying condition.

She was only charged with fraud in taking the $50 with the understanding that the baby was to have a good home. She goes to the Mercer for six months. Nobody knows what became of the six or seven children that passed through her hands.

310 FEET OF SEWER WORK COST $1000 ABOVE ESTIMATE

Last Year's Engineering Department Gave a Price of $372 for the Construction of This Work for the Nicholls Hospital

The City's Board of Works met in business session last night, Chairman Ald. Buller presiding. There were also present Mayor Bradburn, and Aldermen Gordon, McIntyre, Johnston, Duffus and City Engineer Parsons.

Messrs. John Crane and Richard Hall, members of the Nicholls Hospital Board, were present and objected to a bill of $1,346.61 submitted to the Board as the cost of making sewer connection with the new addition to the Hospital. It had been agreed that the Hospital Board should pay the cost of this sewer construction, but the estimated cost of the work presented by Engineer Hay in writing to the Hospital Board was but $372, hence the objection to payment of the bill of $1,346.61 rendered. Only a thousand dollars more than estimated.

It appears that the estimate was a Fairweather one, whereas the work was done when the frost was deep in the ground. This is given as the cause of the abnormal growth of the estimate.

To Ald. Anderson, Mr. Hall replied that it was absolutely necessary to build the sewer last fall, irrespective of weather conditions.

Ald. Buller agreed with Messrs Hall and Crane that in consideration of the benefit to the community this hospital is, Council should deal as leniently as possible with the Board in connection with the foregoing dispute.

Incidentally, Mr. Crane offered that last year Nicholls Hospital treated indigent patients 4000 days at $1 per day.

His Worship remarked that the incident under discussion was a case of poor management in last year's engineering department. When Mr. Hay found it impossible to do the work at the estimated price by reason of frost, he should have returned to the Board of Works and explained the situation. Had he pursued that policy an understanding with the hospital board could have been reached before proceeding with the work at a cost totally unlooked for.

The work done consisted of 310 feet of sewerage.

Ald. Duffus could not see how any amount of frost could make a difference of $1,000 over the estimate.

The Mayor, the Chairman, and Ald. Anderson were appointed a committee to interview Mr. Hay on this question, try and adjust a settlement with the Hospital Board and report back to Council.

Ald. Duffus said he wanted to be satisfied as to the real cause of the discrepancy of $1000 in the estimate for 310 feet of sewerage. "Looks like a waste of the city's money."

STREET SCRAPINGS.

It was resolved that the officials of the Peterborough Baseball Club be given what street scrapings they needed for filling in purposes.

NEW OUTFALL SEWER.

City Engineer Parsons submitted general plans for the new outfall sewer and sanitary treatment of sewage. As soon as the detailed plans are completed Engineer Parsons is instructed to forward them to the Provincial Board of Health for approval.

On motion of Aldermen Johnston and Duffus, the Mayor, Ald. Buller and the City Engineer were instructed to interview the Township of North Monaghan authorities on the question of that portion of the new outfall sewer and surface drainage from the DeLaval property which will run through the township.

SEWER FOREMAN.

The City Engineer reported that he had appointed Martin Neary foreman of sewer work.

SIDEWALKS ASKED FOR.

J. Anderson asked for a sidewalk on Dublin street, north side, east of Water street. The City Engineer was given power to act in this request.

Ald. Johnston asked for a concrete walk on the north side of McDonnel street, from Water to George outside the tree line. This work had already been authorized and as to the location of the walk—outside or inside trees—the members of the Board will take a look at the situation before acting.

BOUNDARY ROAD.

On motion of Ald. Duffus and McIntyre the Reeve of Monaghan will be notified of the bad condition of Lansdowne street adjacent to the Brinton Carpet Works. The township is responsible for the upkeep of this thoroughfare, and the Board thinks it should be kept in passible condition.

STEAMER MANITA WAS SUCCESSFULLY LAUNCHED

The steamer Manita, which has been undergoing repairs for sometime, at Lock No. 6, at the Little Lake, was yesterday successfully launched. The boat has been thoroughly overhauled by Mr. Hickey, the well-known shipbuilder, and is now one of the tidiest, neatest and best craft on these waters. Mr. Hickey certainly understands his business, and is a valuable asset to the steamboat men of Kawartha Lakes, many of the boats plying thereon having been built by him.

Capt. Pearson will have command of the Manita during the season.

INDIANS BAR WOMEN VOTES FOR CHIEFS

Fort William, Ont., July 16.—Although scores of the "gentler" sex sat expectantly on benches while their "braves" this week staged the triennial election of the Fort William band of the Chippewa Indians, at Squaw Bay, votes for women was not even discussed. Previous to the election, Indians had brought word to the city that a number of dusky maidens of the tribe, who had recently returned from school had started an agitation for a voice in the election of a chief and sub-chief.

The question had been seriously considered by some of the younger men, but the old "bucks" at the last hour persuaded the majority of the band that no Indian fit to govern his tribe could in respect to himself accept a chieftainship that had been dominated in the slightest degree by a squaw.

GERMAN AVIATOR KILLED

Jueterbog, Germany, July 16.—Lieutenant Stol, a German army aviator died to-day from the effects of injuries sustained last evening in an aeroplane accident.

SOLD DAUGHTER THIRTY DOLLARS

Later, Mother Who Got Money Repented, and Told Police—Two Men are Held

Milwaukee, July 16.—Accused of buying pretty Anna Gorzo, 16 years old, from her mother for $30 and then shipping her to Phillipsburg, N.J., Henry Herzogi 34 years old, and Paul Boy, 28, were to-day arrested charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor. In District court the case was continued until July 23rd, and the men are being held under bonds of $500 each.

Mrs. Margaret Gorzo, the mother, is the complainant. She asserts the men, who boarded at her home, so poisoned her mind against her daughter that she was willing to sell the girl, who was shipped east last Sunday night. Later she was sorry that she sold the girl and went to the police.

PRINCE ARTHUR OF CONNAUGHT TO WED DUCHESS OF FIFE

Son of Governor-General of Canada to Become Husband of Second Cousin

London, July 16.—The Court Circular announces the engagement of Prince Arthur of Connaught, and the Duchess of Fife. The couple are second cousins.

The Duchess, who was born May 17, 1891, is Princess Alexandra Victoria Alberta Edwina Louise, elder daughter of the late Duke of Fife, who succumbed to exposure after a shipwreck in 1912, and the present Princess Royal, King George's eldest sister.

Prince Arthur Frederick Patrick Albert, who was born January 13, 1883, is the only son and second child of the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, uncle of King George, and the Duchess of Connaught, who was a Prussian princess.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store, we make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 3[illegible] George St., directly opposite Crossman's store.

HUSBAND'S RIGHTS

A Man's Liberties Are Sometimes Interrupted by Over Entertainment

One of the most dangerous things about home life just now is the excessive amount of entertaining the average wife does. Of course, entertaining necessitates going, and the popular hostess is also the popular guest. It is a common happening that husband and wife do not have one uninterrupted evening at home for weeks and sometimes even months at a time. Such a state of affairs is bound to bring disaster in time, both to husband and wife, but it particularly cheats the men out of their home rights. Every man who is at the head of a household is entitled to certain privileges, and wives will have to recognise this fact. Every husband ought to stand for this right of a guestless home part of each week, and he should also take a stand against excessive going, whether it involves his presence or not. It is peculiarly exasperating to the average husband to come home tired and discouraged and find guests, or else to find a programme arranged, that makes him hustle into another outfit and go out till 10 or midnight. It is a shade less trying to find the house deserted and to hear his wife's voice over the telephone asking him to call for her later in the evening, or else telling him she will be home later, but the fact remains that he is being cheated out of his rights. A man is entitled to a warm welcome, a hot, substantial meal in his wife's society, and a quiet evening at least three-fourths of his evenings. He doesn't want to take a hand at some game when tired and depressed, and neither does he want to be routed out about 11 to take some woman home whose husband cannot come for her. If the ladies cannot do the greater part of their entertaining and going in the afternoon, then they had better begin on the morning hours, but the husband's right to the evening ought to be recognised more than it is.

But in cheating their husbands the deluded young women are cheating themselves, for one of these days social joys will wane, but the partnership with a good man founded on equality and justice outlives time.

Fad Became Big Industry.

A Missouri woman has made what started out to be a fad into an interesting vocation. She has always had a fondness for beads, and years ago when traveling in Europe began a collection of fancy beads.

Though beautiful beads of rare coloring were to be bought, she wondered at the lack of taste shown in stringing them. She brought beads from Venice, Dresden and Russia and for her own satisfaction experimented in making them into necklaces. She then began to teach women in a small Missouri town to string beads according to her designs and color scheme. She now has over fifty helpers, and her necklaces are in demand. They are not at all expensive, but are decorative.

She goes abroad every year, and one of the pleasures of her travels is hunting about for odd and unusual beads, which she has so far found in nearly every country of the old world. Some of her beads have histories, and many were found in famous little curio shops.

He Didn't Forget.

Attorney Ephraim Lipschutz recently had a client who was to come up for a hearing before Magistrate Gallagher.

"What is your name?" asked Mr. Lipschutz of his client, when the latter came to him with the case.

"James P O'Brode," was the reply.

"What is your middle name?"

"Patrick."

"Well, now, when Magistrate Gallagher asks you your name, say 'James Patrick O'Brode,' and don't forget the Patrick."

"Sure I won't," promised the client.

When O'Brode was arraigned and Magistrate Gallagher asked the first question, "What is your name?" the prisoner said in stentorian tones, "James Patrick O'Brode, and don't forget the Patrick."

He was discharged.—Philadelphia Press.

CLAIMS 116 YEARS

Kingsville Citizen Says he Can go Long Way Back

Henry Washington, a well-known colored citizen of Kingsville, Ontario claims to be the oldest man in the whole of Canada. Washington claims to be 116 years old. The oldest residents of Kingsville say they can remember him as far back as 1850 and at that time he was grey haired and bent. The old man was sold into slavery at the age of four in Kentucky and for forty-six years was owned by a southern planter. He escaped to Canada previous to the outbreak of the Civil War.

MILLIONS OF BOOKS

Dr. Fortescue, Keeper of Them Retiring From British Museum

Dr. G. K. Fortescue, the Keeper of Printed Books at the British museum, whose retirement is announced after forty-two years' service, related some of his impressions of nearly half a century's experience in one of the most famous institutions in the world.

"I came here in June, 1870," he said. "It was just four years after the retirement of Sir Antony Panizzi, who was really the founder of the library in the condition in which we have it now. When he entered upon the office of Keeper of Printed Books in 1837, he found about 250,000 books in the library.

"During my time I have seen an increase to the library of 2,000,000 books. When I came it had only one rival the Bibliotheque Nationale of Paris but now we have between 3,500,000 and 4,000,000 books, while they have 3,500,000. The Royal library at St Petersburg has 1,900,000; Berlin, 1,400,000; Munich, 1,100,000; and Vienna, 1,000,000. The library of Congress at Washington has 1,700,000. These are the largest libraries in the world, so that although we are the youngest of the great libraries of Europe, we are also the largest."

SAW WEST DEVELOP

One of First White Women Born in Manitoba Witnessed Stormy Scenes

Mrs. Mary Ann Clelland, who was one of the first white women born in Manitoba and who died at Treherne, Man., at the age of 76, had in common with all the old timers of the West, many varied and stirring experiences during her life time.

She was the daughter of Duncan McRae, the builder of the forts at Upper Fort Garry and Lower Fort Garry for the Hudson's Bay company. Her father also built the old Kildonan Presbyterian church and St. John's cathedral, Winnipeg.

Mrs. Clelland was twice married and was the mother of 14 children, nine of whom are still living. Her first marriage took place in 1862, when she became the wife of Alexander McDonald.

Mrs. Clelland remembered the events of the Metis uprising, known as the first Northwest rebellion. She also witnessed the flood which, caused by the overflowing of the Red river, submerged the whole of the territory on which the city of Winnipeg now stands. She sat on the banks of the river and watched houses and barns being carried away by the flood.

When over sixty years of age Mrs. Clelland walked from Selkirk to Winnipeg to the bedside of her son who had met with an accident. The weather was so bad that horses could not make the trip.

"A Progressive Peterborough."

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Examiner, in its issue of Monday last, referred to the North Grey election as taking place on Tuesday. e would advise the editor to put more water in his whiskey hereafter.

Mr. Rowell, having experienced the sensation of the steam roller passing over him, says: "The fight has just begun." It is to be hoped, however, he will find time to slip a few throat lozenges into his mouth before renewing the battle.

In North Grey the boots of Mr. Proudfoot are seen sticking out of the ruck caused by the political upheaval. It seems the old man's sins have at last overtaken him.

"I said in my haste that all men are liars," declared the Psalmist. He was repentant then but if he were living now he would probably realize that he made no mistake.

The most widely disseminated fiction in Peterborough, though not the best seller, is the printed regulations issued some time ago by the Health Department, declaring those who spit on the sidewalks will be prosecuted.

According to a news item, a Hamilton citizen became mentally unbalanced while witnessing a ball game. That is nothing however, to worry about, for here in Peterborough scores of fans go wildly crazy every night when the local club wins a game.

THE END OF MILITANCY.

According to dispatches from Great Britain militant suffragism is at its last grasp. We have, of course, heard this tale before, but the figures given by the Daily Mail, if accurate, certainly tend to show that the back of the militant organization is broken. According to the Mail there were, fifteen months ago, two hundred and four militant suffragettes undergoing sentences for violations of the law of various kinds, whereas to-day there are only twenty-one, of whom twelpe have been temporarily released. Of the nine in prison, the Mail says seven are taking food regularly.

The Mail sees in this a triumph for the so-called Cat and Mouse Bill under which militants who go on hunger strikes are released as soon as their health becomes affected, only to be arrested again as soon as, in the judgment of the authorities it is safe to allow them to begin their starvation tactics all over again.

Probably nothing more calculated to break down the most stubborn resistance than is the Cat and Mouse Bill was ever invented but it is very doubtful that the Mail is right in its assumption that it has had most to do with the final overthrow of the militants. What has done more than anything else to render rowdyism ineffective is the fact that it has arrayed against the women's suffrage movement the great body of public opinion without which no such movement can succeed.

The British public were, up to a few months ago, largely indifferent to the votes for women crusade. Earlier militancy justifies itself perhaps, in so far as, through it, the cause was brought vividly before the public eye. Probably the majority of those who thought about about the matter at all were mildly sympathetic. The defeat —or betrayal, as the militants prefer to call it—of the bill enfranchising a large number of women, by the unexpected ruling of Speaker Lowther early last spring increased the public sympathy for the women's cause. But from that day forward every act of militancy —and they were most numerous and most grave—was just another fatal blow to the cause of women's enfranchisement. With blind obstinacy Mrs. Pankhurst and her lieutenants persisted in their ruinous tactics until, within the last two months, we have seen them beaten and abused and chased from every place where they dared to raise their colors.

No one, outside of a few zealots, will regret the end of the reign of terror. It has long outlived its usefulness, if ever indeed it had any. It has done vastly more harm than good. The one thing to be hoped for now, in the interests of the cause in Britain, is that it may be forgotten as quickly as possible.

Old Folks' Coughs Permanently Cured

The Public is Loud in Its Praise of the Modern Direct Breathing Cure.

Elderly people take cold easily. Unlike young folks, they recover slowly, if ever. That is why so many people past middle life die of pneumonia. Even though pneumonia does not develop and kill, coughs certainly weaken all elderly people.

Cough Syrups seldom do much good because they upset digestion. Any druggist or doctor knows that a much more effective treatments is "CATARRHOZONE," which heals and soothes the irritated surfaces of the throat.

In using Catarrhozone you do not take medicine into the stomach—you simply breathe into the throat, nose and lungs rich piney balsamic vapor, so full of healing power that colds, catarrh and bronchitis disappear almost instantly.

"At sixty-eight years of age I can testify that I am never troubled with coughs or colds," writes J. E. Pilgrim, of Kingston. "They used to be the bain of my life, and that was before I used Catarrhozone, which was recommended to me by C. L. Prouse, druggist. To use Catarrhozone is just like being in an immense pine woods. The balsamic vapor of Catarrhozone is like a tonic, it is so stimulating to the breathing organs, so soothing to sore spots, so full of power to drive out colds and congestion. I will always use and recommend Catarrhozone as a preventive and cure for coughs, colds, bronchitis, throat irritation and catarrh.
(Signed) "J. E. PILGRIM."

A Catarrhozone Inhaler in your pocket or purse enables you to stop a cold with the first sneeze. Large size costs $1.00 and supplies treatment for two months; small size, 50c.; trial size, 25c.; all storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

IF YOU CAN'T GO TO SLEEP

Counting, Reading and Special Diet Are Suggested as Helpful for the Wooer of Slumber.

A sufferer from insomnia retails a number of counsels he has received, of which the first comes from the poet M. Leconte, who says:

"Open your window wide. Lie with your head as low as possible and you will sleep like a post."

"Accustom yourself to take an hour or two's rest in a deck chair after every meal," writes another. "Take down from your shelves some old-fashioned novel of which you have an affectionate remembrance as one of the joys of your youth and read it while you are on your deck chair. The more you are wearied by it the better you will sleep. The secret of a good night is not to tire yourself out in the evening, but to idle away the time.

"An important point, though a difficult one, is to avoid any dread of insomnia. Personally I derive benefit from calculating the multiples of two or three as far as I can go. Or else I 'count elephants;' one elephant and one elephant make two elephants, two elephants and one elephant makes three elephants; three elephants and one elephant, and so on.

"Finally, knock off your black coffee, even your morning cup on rising, and take no meat in the evening. For lunch eat nothing but fruit, and for dinner a vegetable soup, vermicelli, mashed potatoes, and one or two biscuits.

"If in spite of all this sleep refuses to come try reading. But don't read anything lively or interesting. In my own case it is very rare that insomnia does not succumb to two or three pages of Plato's 'Phaedo.'

"An eminent doctor of Lyons says much the same thing. Another suggests: 'Count slowly from one upwards. It is very rare one gets up to 200 without going to sleep. It is on record, however, that one victim got up to 16,987, and then it was time to get up!'"

Very Much So.

"I daresay that grumpy old millionaire did not leave one joiful recollection behind him when he died."

"Oh, yes, he did He left a merry widow."

"I'm with the people!" exclaimed the balloonist, as the rope broke and he fell into the grand stand.

WORK OF A CENTURY IN WESTERN CANADA

Wonderful Progress Since the First Settlers Arrived at Red and Assiniboia Rivers

More than a century ago the first crop was sown in Western Canada. The acreage placed under cultivation was not large, nor was the harvest which was reaped in the following summer an abundant one, for, the sowers and the reapers were only one hundred and twenty-five in number. They were the Selkirk settlers, who late in the year 1812 had arrived at the junction of the Red and Assiniboine Rivers to establish the first colony of English-speaking people in the great west of Canada. Naturally in the spring of 1813 it was not with the thought of producing grain for export that this little community of Scottish immigrants decided to "break" a few acres of land along the banks of the Red River. Need of food for themselves and for a few domestic animals was the impelling force which led to the first wheat crop of the west. Fur-trading was the business of the country one hundred years ago, and little did the early pioneers of that vast portion of Canada think that one day their sweeping prairies would become the granary of an Empire and the home for thousands of farmers. In 1831 the Red River settlement had increased in size to 2,731 people, 2,152 acres of land had been brought under cultivation, and the buildings and live stock comprised 375 houses, 365 stables, 134 barns, 410 horses and 1,442 cattle. To-day the site of that first settlement in the Canadian west is part of the large industrial city of Winnipeg, and from a struggling group of one hundred and twenty-five souls the population of western Canada has grown until it now numbers 1,875,000, and has brought into cultivation nearly 15,000,000 acres of fertile prairie land. And the end is not yet. Only the southern half of the great west has been discovered, conquered and made productive. If there is any one vision which the four ambitious Provinces of western Canada see more than another at the present time, it is the bigger and more mature stature into which they will have grown when the future development of the northern half of the west has been accomplished. Each of the Provinces has its wonderful northland, and the chief task before their respective peoples during the next twenty-five years will be the colonization and development of these last portions of Canada's unexplored territory.

MAKING PATENT FUEL.

In the coal-mines a large amount of small coal is sent up, and, although the miner is not paid for it, it is far from being worthless or useless, the coal-owner selling all the small made at the pits.

In Cardiff, Swansea, and Port Talbot there are works where small coal is converted into blocks called patent fuel. The method is by tipping the coal into a large bin, after which it is mixed with pitch, and all ground very fine. It is then conveyed into pug-mills, and super-heated steam is passed through it, knives revolving on a shaft keeping it in motion while this is being done.

Afterwards, being then in a sticky condition, it is passed into a press, and a tremendous pressure applied. This turns the mass into hot, steaming blocks, which are then pushed off either on to endless travelling wires, which convey them into canal-boats, or to a jetty, whence they are loaded into ships for conveyance abroad. The different Governments use a great deal of it for naval purposes.

In the pit itself much of the small coal that is cut is thrown back with the rubbish, and only large coal is loaded and taken up.

THE JEWISH METHOD OF KILLING CATTLE

Rabbi Jacobs Says There is no Cruelty in it When Properly Carried Out

Rev. S. Jacobs, the senior rabbi of Toronto was interviewed regarding the Jewish method of killing cattle, and as to whether or not there was cruelty in the method.

"As far as the slaughtering of animals is concerned," he said, "the Jewish law on the subject demands not only that the 'schochet' be well versed in the law, but he must be absolutely skilled in his work. He must pass a most rigid examination before a competent authority, and must also be an expert in examining the knife to see that it has not the least flaw or notch. One who is intoxicated or one whose hand trembles is prohibited from acting as a schochet for several reasons, chief of which is lest he press the knife against the throat of the animal instead of gently applying it. The knife must be twice the width of the throat of the animal about to be slaughtered, the maximum length being 14 finger breadths. The knife must be sharp, smooth, and without any perceptible notch, and it must be thoroughly examined before the slaughtering, and even afterward, for should there be a notch the animal becomes ritually unfit for food."

In touching upon the possibility of cruelty of this method, Rabbi Jacobs continued: "Judaism inculcates the most humane treatment of all dumb animals. This is insisted upon, not only in the Bible, but in all the rabbinical writings. Animals must not be tortured unnecessarily. The Mosaic injunction that the ox must not be muzzled whilst threshing was explained by our teachers of old to be a general precept enjoining us to act with every humane consideration towards all dumb animals. Judaism forbade the yoking of animals of different species or of unequal strength, or of wild and tame animals together, or the slaying of the dam and the young, or the taking of both mother and young from a nest. Even hunting was discouraged from motives of sport.

"The different regulations for the slaughtering of animals are all strictly in harmony with the principles of the prevention of cruelty to animals. This ancient institution of Judaism has been repeatedly attacked, but the Jewish method of slaughtering has been again and again vindicated as far more humane than any other method in vogue. Dr. Dembo has proven this most ably in his work, 'The Slaughtering of Animals.'"

It was shown that the Jewish law, far from countenancing cruelty, enjoins the most loving kindness to all animals, and Rev. Mr. Jacobs gave many quotations to prove this. Beasts were to have their rest on the Sabbath day, and their masters were to first care for them, "and then eat and be satisfied." The words from Psalm 1, 1: "Who stand not in the way of sinners," were expounded in the Talmud as being an injunction against associating with hunters who tortured dumb animals by urging dogs against them.

"Yes," concluded the Rabbi, "there is not the least foundation for the charge of cruelty in the Jewish method of slaughtering cattle, if the laws appertaining thereto are conscientiously carried out. With our Christian brethren, we believt in the words of the poet:

> 'He prayeth best who loveth best
> All things, both great and small;
> For the dear God who loveth us
> He made and loveth all.'"

HOUSEWIVES' HINTS

A teaspoonful of borax to a quart of water will make hard water soft, so that it can be used for washing the most delicate skin.

If grease is spilled upon the kitchen stove throw a handful of salt upon it and it will prevent any disagreeable odor arising.

After peeling vegetables, to remove the stains from the hands, take a piece of the peeling and rub the stains before washing the hands.

When baking cakes or scones, if the soda is dissolved in a little boiling milk it prevents the disagreeable lumps which are so often seen.

If you use an oil or gas stove keep a box of sand at hand in case of an accident. Sand will extinguish burning oil when water will only increase the flames.

Permanganate of potash will cleanse dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

Instead of putting food into the oven to keep hot for latecomers, try covering it closely with a tin, and set over a basin of hot water. This plan will keep the food hot, and at the same time prevent it from drying.

Always read the label on a medicine bottle every time you give a dose, and no matter how well you know the bottle. Bottles bear a great external similarity to one another, but their contents are generally vastly different.

THE BRITISH CANADIAN
BRICK AND COAL COMPANY, LTD.

Incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act.
NO PERSONAL LIABILITY

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL - - $500,000.

Consisting of

$200.000. 7 Per Cent Preferred at $10.00 Per Share, with Bonus of 25 per cent Common. $300.000 Common at $10.00 per share

DIRECTORS:

J. S. DOUGLAS, Merchant, Winnipeg.
W. F. TALLMAN, Street Commissioner, Winnipeg.
A. B. WOOLDRIDGE, Gentleman, Winnipeg.
D. W. McKERCHAR, Barrister, Winnipeg.
V. A. TALBOT, Real Estate Broker, Winnipeg.

The above Company has purchased from the Excelsior Coal and Brick Co., Ltd., their whole plant as a going concern, the purchase price to be taken in shares of the new Company, and it is the intention of the Directors to equip the plant to make it one of the largest in the West.

The plant is situated in that rich tract of mineral producing country surrounding Estevan, and is near the town. It comprises 640 acres of the best clay and coal to be found anywhere.

The shaft of the coal mine has been sunk to a depth of seventy feet to reach a seam of the best lignite coal, and there are enough entries and passages to enable an output, at slight expense, of 200 tons of coal per day. Other mines in the district are producing less and making considerable profit. A conservative estimate of the profit on each ton is $1.00, but from Government borings near the property it has been shown that there is a seam of coal 650 feet from the surface which is similar to the Lethbridge coal, and which could be sold f.o.b. the mine for at least $5.00 per ton, netting the Company $3.50 per ton. It is to reach this seam and further equip the brick plant that the issue of stock has been made.

There is a constant and ever-increasing demand for brick. At the present moment the price for common brick all over the West is from $12.50—$13.00 per thousand. The clay on our property is of the finest, and makes a brick second to none. We can make bricks for about $4.00 per thousand, so that the profit on the product is considerable. It is the intention of the Company to increase the present brick plant to allow of an output of from 75,000—100,000 common bricks per day, and at least 25,000 pressed bricks, which retail at $25.00 per thousand and cost about $7.00 to produce.

Under the coal there is a strata of fireclay, which is extremely scarce in Canada, and commands a high price. It is intended to instal a machine for the making of fire brick, which is being almost entirely brought from the United States and Scotland; also to manufacture sewer pipes and hollow tiles. Firebrick and hollow tiles command the high price of $40.00 per thousand, and we can make them for less than $8.00.

Coal and brick run in conjunction is probably the finest profit-making combination known. It has been proven over and over again that with competent management such a proposition is a success from the first.

The Directors have insured the success of the new Company by engaging the services of one of the most expert brick men in the West, who will supervise the laying out and working of the new plant.

It is with unbounded faith in the future of this western country that the Directors have decided on offering to the public a share in its development and wealth. The man who invests in this proposition makes a two-fold investment. He invests and aids in the development of his country, and at the same time puts his capital to profitable use.

Workmen Find 500 Silver Pennies Beneath Church Floor

On behalf of the Crown claim was laid to some 500 silver pennies of the reign of Henry III., found by workmen employed in removing Steppingley Church, on the Duke of Bedford's Woburn estate.

The coins, which are dated between 1248 and 1272, were concealed five feet below the present chancel floor and one foot below the ancient floor. It is thought that they were a votive offering in recognition of a safe return from abroad and placed before a shrine of the Virgin Mary by Peter di Vitella, who was rector of the village from 1247 to 1272.

He who does not respect confidence will never find happiness in his path. The belief in virtue vanishes from his heart, the source of nobler actions becomes extinct in him.—Auffenberg.

Courage

Because I lift my head above the mist,
Where the sun shines and the broad breezes blow,
By every ray and every raindrop kissed,

Think you I find no bitterness at all,
No burden to be borne, like Christians pack?
Think you there are no heavy tears to fall,
Because I keep them back?

The "Yanking" Habit

The "yanking" mother has a good deal to answer for. Watch her put a toddling youngster on or off a street car. It never seems to occur to this woman to stoop and put her hands under his arms and lift the boy up or down. She merely tightens her hold on his little hand and swings him down, or "yanks" him up.

The delicacy of a young child's tendons and muscles is little considered by the "yanking" mother, and if this child gets to be one-sided with one shoulder higher than the other, or has a crooked back, or a displaced spinal column, it is the mother who grievously wonders why.

If such a person were pulled up a few steps in the fashion she herself employs with tender little children, perhaps she could be brought to realise "why."

SHORT MOTOR TOUR

Ennui Burdened Man of Society Takes Up Human Interest Matters.

By ALVAH JORDAN GARTH.

"Disappointed, Gordon?"

"With everything in life generally," was the reply in a tone of ennui.

"Not including Miss Marcia Vansant, of course?" insinuated Ned Darrow, a trace of mockery in his voice.

Dale Gordon did not reply. He winced slightly. Miss Marcia Vansant was a sensitive topic with the young man just at present. He had danced attendance on the queenly beauty half the season. He had come down to Seagrove at her royal request, and this was the second day he had motored to the train to find no eager, delighted lady love, as at times he pictured her.

They were not as yet engaged, but as Ned Darrow and all the social world of Seagrove knew, the proud coquette had set the net for the wealthy young city broker. A week at Seagrove would settle the affair, Ned had told mutual friends, and confidentially he stated he was sorry for it.

"What you want, Gordon, is something in life to interest you," he now said. "Dawdling the time away at clubs, soirees and summer resorts kills a fellow's vitality. Try something for a change."

"As what, for instance?" challenged Gordon.

"Human interest, philanthropy—why, say, the very thing! See here—look yonder."

Ned pointed to a young girl who sat on one of the station benches. Her eyes were fixed sadly down the rails. There were tear stains on her pretty cheeks, and something so inexpressibly mournful in her pose that even Gordon, chivalrous and gentle always with the opposite sex, was at once interested.

The Machine Fairly Skimmed the Roadway.

"Looks to be in trouble," he remarked.

"She is. Poor little thing!" said Ned. "She has been trying to support a widowed mother by taking an art class at the seminary here. It seems she received a rush telegram an hour ago telling her that her mother was dangerously sick, and that if she hoped to see her again in life she must take the first train for Brookville. She missed it by four minutes, no other train until eight o'clock this evening, and there she sits, eating her heart out. There's my train. Good-by."

Ned flashed out of view. Gordon stood studying the forlorn girl for a few moments. Then he went straight up to the bench.

"Excuse me, miss," he said, lifting his hat, "my friend just told me of your misfortune in missing your train."

The girl started, looked up, and then drew back a little shyly. The open, sympathetic eyes meeting her own seemed to inspire her with the belief that the interest of their owner was genuine.

"It is so heart-breaking!" she sobbed. "My mother is dying, and there is no way of reaching her before midnight."

"Brookville cannot be over seventy-five miles by a cross-country route," said Gordon. "That is no task for my machine. Come, miss, cheer up. We'll try to remedy your trouble."

As he pointed to his touring car the young girl at once understood him.

"You are so kind—so kind," she murmured, as Gordon helped her to a seat in the machine.

Good roads and fair weather made the first stage of the trip pleasant and comfortable. A farmer yelled after them as they whirled down a country road an hour later, but Gordon had not caught the import of his call. A minute afterwards, at a sharp curve, he straightened up with a thrill. Recent rains had eaten into a narrow stretch of turnpike with deep ditches on either side. As they fairly flew along great masses of earth were disturbed and rolled down. At one spot a wheel went over the edge. To attempt to stop was to invite disaster. With the power applied to the last notch, the machine fairly skimmed the roadway.

A great exhalation of relief left Gordon's lips as the machine struck a safer thoroughfare. He turned now to glance at his passenger. She was pale as death, but she smiled mutely up at him.

"That was a narrow graze," he said. "Were you frightened?"

"How could I be," she replied, "with you, who have so bravely tried to help a poor, friendless girl?"

"Do not delay to thank me," said Gordon, as two hours later their auto stopped in front of the widow's home at Brookville. "Get to your mother at once, Miss Barton."

She had told him something of her life history during the trip. Her name was Eunice Barton. An earnest-faced young man came out of the house while Gordon was getting his machine ready for the return trip. He seized both hands of his sister's timely friend.

"I cannot find words to thank you," he said fervently. "You have saved my dear mother's life. She was sinking fast, and the delusion that some one had stolen Eunice away from her, the doctor said, was distracting her dangerously. She just smiled and sank into sister's arms like a happy child. The doctor says the crisis is past, and thank you and—bless you!"

At eight o'clock that evening fate willed that Gordon, passing an open window at the Vansant home, overheard these words:

"It's time you ceased trifling with your chances, Marcia. Mr. Gordon will not stand your coquetry much longer."

"Oh, I can bring him to my feet when I choose," was the confident reply of the imperious beauty to her manoeuvering mamma.

Gordon turned on his heel, and Marcia waited in vain for her expected caller that evening. If there was any consolation for Gordon as he thought over affairs in general that night it was memory of the glad little face that had looked up so gratefully into his own when the automobile stopped at Brookville.

Gordon wrote a brief note to Marcia the next morning. In a very formal manner he announced a prospective motor tour, and indicated that it would end with a resumption of business duties in the city.

That motor tour was not very extended. Gordon felt it his duty to learn how Eunice's mother was getting along. He was actually glad when the auto broke down near Brookville. He put up at the town hotel that night, and called at the Barton home the next day.

That was only the first of many pleasant hours spent with Eunice. Her mother was convalescing rapidly, and Gordon convinced her that auto rides would hasten her recovery. When the mother could not go the daughter did.

There came the crowning moment in those two lives when wistful eyes met the love challenge of honest, earnest ones. It was at the gate of the little cottage, and Gordon said:

"Does your mother still worry over her old fear of your being stolen away?"

"Oh, no," replied Eunice innocently. "That was only a passing delusion."

"Suppose that some one should really steal you away?" suggested Gordon.

"Who would do that with poor little me?" inquired Eunice.

Dale Gordon told the fluttering, blushing girl who would, the chance given. With her head nestling on his broad, protecting shoulder, she whispered back lovingly:

"You do not need to steal me away, Dale. I would go anywhere in the world with you."

Busy Night After the Election.

"Well, no, Mr. Slickun," said the landlord of the Sheedee Tavern, addressing the encyclopedia agent. "I am afraid you can't do much business here, just at this time. The people who might be expected to appreciate your books are all otherwise engaged. Pip Maudlin has set out to roll a peanut eight miles with a toothpick and won't be back for some time. Claud Fidd will commence in a few minutes to parade solemnly up and down all day with a portrait of Taft displayed wrong side up on his back. Judge Ramsbottom is heading a procession of twenty-eight consecutive wheelbarrows, each with a successful patriot in it and an unsuccessful one pushing it, or vicy vercy—for nobody really knows who gets the worst of it in a wheelbarrow ride—twenty-five or thirty gentlemen are now buying the same quantity of hats for an equal number of other gentlemen, and practically all the rest of the voters are either sleeping off their triumph or disappointment or planning how they can get the postoffice. So, as the people who ordinarily would be interested in your valuable works are mixed up in the usual after-election pursuits, I don't s'pose you can get their undivided attention."

Started Important Industry.

Living on a pension in London is W. H. Wickham, the man responsible for the introduction of rubber trees in India at the risk of his life. The agricultural department of East India sent Wickham to gather the seed of the Para rubber tree in Brazil. Wickham lived in the jungles with the natives and won their confidence. Slowly he collected seeds until he had 75,000 of them. He put them in bags and smuggled them aboard a ship, which was short of cargo and funds. That was the beginning of the rubber growing industry in India, and now millions of dollars are made annually from the rubber plantations in Ceylon, Malaya and other East Indian provinces. Wickham ran the risk of a long term in prison, for a Brazilian law prohibited the removal of seeds from the country.

SUFFRAGISTS DARN SOCKS

Show They Are Good Housewives as Well as Politicians

Minnesota suffragists decided upon a measure whereby they hoped to counteract the impression that women who long for the ballot are not good housewives.

At the State Fair they maintained a booth where men, single or married, might have their socks darned. Having chosen the darning needle as their emblem, the following war cry was adopted:—

Darn the Government, darn the socks.
That's the way to the ballot box.
Patch the holes in hubby's hose,
March to the polls and voice our woes

Long Engagements

Young ladies in Russia are not at all averse to long engagements, and use all sorts of artifices to stave off the wedding day as long as possible; but in no country in the world are courtships so abnormally long as in Bohemia, where engagements commonly last from fifteen to twenty years. In fact, there recently died there, at the age of ninety-nine an old man who had been courting for seventy-five years, and who was married on his deathbed.

MASTER OF ART OF GRAFTING

Representative Burleson of Texas Describes the Operations of the King of Them All.

"No, I won't give you a cent. You are a grafter, and a smooth one, but you don't get me."

Following this declaration just outside the national Democratic headquarters one man made for the elevator and the other entered the general offices of the national Democratic machine. The latter was Representative Albert Sidney Burleson of Austin Tex., and his face was flushed with anger.

"There is the nerviest fellow you-all ever saw in your life," said Mr. Burleson, by way of apology and explanation. "That fellow keeps a hot trail for men in politics and borrows right and left. I don't think he ever made an honest cent in his life.

"I first knew him in the Panhandle section of Texas. There, by sheer nerve, he took over a small ranch and then borrowed money from a bank to stock and run the place. Here is a story that is typical of him: One day he took a horse to a negro blacksmith to have it shod. He induced a neighbor named Peters to accompany him. After the negro had put two shoes on the horse he turned to Peters and said:

"'That's the best work I ever saw a nigger do. By George, he deserves a reward. Give me a dollar for a few minutes, Peters, to give this nigger.'

"Peters forked over the dollar and went away. When the negro blacksmith had finished putting the last two shoes on the horse, this fellow dropped back a few feet and stood looking on in admiration.

"'That's the finest job I ever saw in my life,' he said. 'Any man, even if he is a nigger, that can shoe horses like that can drink with me. Come on, my man, and have a drink.'

"And then he took the negro across the street to a saloon and borrowed the dollar from him on the way over. He is actually the best money getter I ever saw, and I honestly believe if he was stranded on the Sahara desert he would have a harem and car fare to San Francisco before two days. He is surely a wonder."—New York Herald.

MEN AND COURTING

Men from the beginning of time have liked to be the hunters; women are supposed to be the quarry. It is to the quarry's interest not to wish to do any hunting, not to care, till she is certain of the hunter, whether he pursues her or not. Such an attitude is not calculating; it is merely self-respecting and self-preservative. On such cautious advance towards love some of the happiest marriages are built. No romantic girl need fear that by crushing down a baseless emotion she will inhibit the real coming of love. If love is real, it makes a progress which is resistless, however slow. On the other hand, if the romantic girl yields without restraint to baseless emotions, she not only weakens her will-power, but she may injure her pride by showing herself too ready to receive love. A man is the happier for being sure he is well loved by his wife, but when love is just beginning its growth in his heart he values the girl the more if he is shown that her response is too rare and high a thing to be recorded without strong suing on his part.—Maude Radford Warren in Woman's World.

ONTARIO'S WORK IN PRISON REFORM

Men Are Found to be Quite Securely Held Without Bolts, Bars, Cells or Guards

One thing Ontario is doing that bids fair to make her famous, and that is the working out the Prison Farm idea. There are about 440 prisoners employed in the open air, unconfined, and practically unguarded. They are under well defined discipline, it is true, and must respect rules and regulations but they work in the open air unshackled and free from the inspection of rifle-carrying guards.

Sixty or seventy men worked a whole summer in the open near Whitby preparing the ground for a new Provincial asylum. These prisoners worked just as an equal number of ordinary laborers would have done, although the discipline of the camp was, perhaps, somewhat more definite. No attemts at escape were made and no trouble of any kind occurred. Near Fort William sixty or seventy prisoners were put to work clearing a thousand acres of land with only four paid men in charge of the party, one of them being the cook. There are no handcuffs, rifles, bolts, nor bars in this prison system. The men are handled by rules and regulations—they are under the control of law and assent to it. If they tried to escape nobody could stop them. Yet each man knows that if he did run away he would be recaptured, and could not be expected to be trusted a second time, but must count upon being locked up behind stone walls. They do not run away. They are not insubordinate. In the open air they work hard, eat well and sleep well.

This method of prison reform is based not on kindness but on horse sense. The object is not to impress upon the men how good, kind, and charitable the State is in treating them so, but they are permitted to discover if they like how sensible the State is in handling them in this way, and how powerful organised society is as against an erring individual, with all locks, bolts, bars, stone walls, and armed guards done away with. To the man who finds himself unconfined, unwatched, yet beyond all question as much a prisoner as if he were walled in a cell, there must come a realization of the futility of fighting against an organized society so powerful and so confident.

LEARNED TO DRAW IN BUSY STREET

Famous Canadian Painter Got His First Lesson From Pavement Artist in London

Prominent among Canadian artists is Mr. Frederick S. Challoner and behind his rise into the front rank of painters in this western hemisphere lies a world of romance worthy of the great days of the past, when the homeless hero went forth penniless into the world with nothing but a stout heart, a strong will and an unconquerable resolve to make his mark.

Mr. Challoner learned his first lessons in painting on the pavement in a busy street in Stratford, London, where an ex-seaman by his artistic skill drew forth from the passers-by a scanty shower of coppers from the busy throng of workmen who then as now passed and repassed in this industrial centre of Britain. Challoner watched with great interest as the old seaman rapidly sketched the Tay bridge disaster, the bombardment of Alexander by the British fleet, and kindred subjects, watched while the well-known facial lines of Gladstone and Disraeli found a place on the city's pavement.

Came to Cnada

A little later the British boy made his way to Canada and within a few hours found a niche as office boy in a Toronto place of business. That is nearly thirty years ago, and during practically all those years the artist of to-day has been plying his profession in one form or another, first with amateurish effort with little or no reward, until to-day he occupies a leading position in the Dominion in the fields of mural and portrait painting.

Soon after his arrival on this side of the Atlantic Mr. Challoner secured a position in the artist's department of a lithographic establishment, and in the five years passed there, such progress was made that he decided to establish himself as a painter.

Ability Recognized

The artistic men and women in the locality quickly recognised his genius and worth and he was made a member of the Ontario Society of Artists, a connection which still exists. Then he was elected an associate of the Royal Canadian Academy of Art, and finding a useful as well as a profitable field in the land of his adoption Mr. Challoner has continued to reside on this continent, save when in pursuit of local coloring for European and other eastern work.

FROZEN BY FISH-POWER

A Nova Scotian's Tale of Ice-Cream Making

A New York editor received the following letter:

"I have read an interesting account of singing fish in your paper. It recalled to me the memory of a rather remarkable fish we have in Nova Scotia. It is known as the 'Frost Fish,' because it may be frozen like a lump of ice, but, if placed in water in that condition, it soon thaws out and swims around as vigorously as ever. The natives make use of this property to make ice cream. The fish is caught, frozen, and placed in the cream. In thawing out it freezes the cream, and its movements at the same time beat the mixture, making it smooth."

Here are the editor's remarks:

"Taking them by and large, from Moosehead Lake [illegible] Sound and from the upper [illegible] to the Gulf, we have some very capable and industrious fish here in this country. [illegible] we hand the reel and rod over to Nova Scotia. We have talent in this country; but Nova Scotia is the abode [illegible]."

WANT SONG-BIRDS

Movement to Bring Out Insect Eaters to Vancouver Island

The Attorney-General of British Columbia, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, and the Provincial Game Warden, received a deputation from the Natural History Society of British Columbia, which desired to put before them reasons why the Government should grant the Society permission to import from the Old Country song birds (goldfinches, brown linnets, sky larks, robins, blue tits) into Vancouver Island.

Twelve years ago the society collected money for the same purpose and made a similar importation of which there survive the skylarks which have established themselves at Gordon Head and elsewhere. The deputation tried to remove the impression that the birds they wanted could do any harm to the fruit industry, and represented that by their activity in destroying grubs and insects these birds would really prove a blessing to the agriculture and fruit growing of the island.

MARVELS OF RADIUM

Latest Use of Mineral is to Mix It With Water for Medicine

In the medical exhibition at Westminster there is a dark room where an expert, rather blanched in appearance from living so much without light, shows you some of the wonders of radium.

When your eyes have got used to the darkness of his cave he will hand you a commonplace cardboard box and tell you to stare intently at the lid. You do so, and soon the thing becomes luminous, breaks out into shifting radiations as if it contained some wonderfully heartless coal of fire. The expert says it looks like a snowstorm, and so it does, if you can imagine flakes of rosy snow drifting and circling round a center. Then he opens the door and lets in the disillusioning daylight and taking off the lid you find inside the box nothing but a tiny drop of water, a new and fascinating branch of radium therapy.

You can now buy it in bottles—radiogen water—and drink it for the cure of rheumatism, gout and similar ailments.

The theory now is, of course, that the therapeutic virtue of the waters of Bath, Buxton and other wells is mainly due to their radio activity. It has been observed that the workmen in the mines in Bohemia and in Cornwall, where radium ore is dug, rarely suffer from rheumatism or neuralgia. So you can drink radium as medicine as well as use it as a search light in surgery.

FUEL SUPPLY OF THE WEST

Unlimited Gas Well Wasting its Flow in One Spot and Coal Beds Afire for Century

Over a dozen years ago a party of oil-diggers were sent by the Geological Survey of Canada into what was then an almost unknown part of the North-West Territories, to find if the reported existence of petroleum in the Far North was a fact.

An oil-boring outfit was finally set up at Pelican Rapids, on the Athabasca River, and put to work. When the drill had reached a depth of 820 feet it struck gas. The flow was so great that it drove back iron balls that were dropped down the pipe, and the noise of the escaping gas could sometime be heard two or three miles away. It did not lessen any, and the men were at length compelled to abandon the effort.

The next year they came back, hoping to find the gas run out enough to allow them to resume boring. But when they had cleaned out the hole and drilled only seventeen feet further the gas escape recommenced with such intensity that again they were forced to stop.

Burning for Years

After they went, some one came along and lighted the jet. It is still burning. Report has it that it has been burning continuously, but it is more likely to have been extinguished now and then during the past dozen years and re-lighted by settlers and passers-by. That the gas flow is undiminished, however, is quite certain, for there is a flame nearly fifty feet high and of very substantial circumference.

The Athabasca River, in whose vicinity this effusive gas supply is found, is one of the great waterways of the new North. The Peace and Mackenzie Rivers make up with it a trio that mean almost everything to the industrial future of the North-West, and among their good points is the fact that they all run through belts of gas, oil, tar, and coal lands. There is, for instance, in the Athabasca district, a tract of a hundred thousand square miles that is saturated with petroleum.

Gas, Oil, Tar, and Coal

Coal, oil, and gas are the three wonder riches of that far corner of the Empire. It has been supposed to yield chiefly furs and pelts, but these other products are quite as native and far more valuable. The whole north land above the present line of rail is a region of mineral wealth, which, in its nearer limits, takes the form of the largest gas and oil reserves in the world, and, farther north, of coal beds no one knows how large. About two hundred miles from the Arctic Circle there is a coal area, on the Mackenzie River, that has been on fire for a hundred years. It has been slowly burning from within, and spreading, until now the fire has covered some twenty miles, showing a broken line of low, mysterious earthflame that at night is one of the grandest and weirdest of northern sights.

HAITI'S QUEER WAYS

Its Presidential Office Very Unstable—Army Mostly Generals

Haiti is probably the most turbulent country in the world. Out of its last twenty-eight presidents, twenty-four had either to flee for their lives or were assassinated or killed in battle. That is, if the death of President Cincinnatus Leconte may be considered a murder, for there seems to be little doubt that the explosion of the powder magazine which caused his palace to burn and brought death to Leconte in his bed, was a revolutionary act, carefully planned and carried out.

It used to be a French possession, and a mangled French is still spoken there; but for the last century or so it has been an independent black republic. The Haitians believe themselves to be the most civilized nation on earth, but it is a comic opera kind of civilization. The cities, for instance, are fitted up for electric light, but the electricity does not work, and nobody tries to make it. Haiti is so shiftless that it has no foreign trade to speak of, so there are very few whites on the island. No white person is allowed to land.

Haiti used to be known as the land of the dukes with the absurd names. Some sixty years ago it started a peerage, and every peer chose the name whose sound struck his fancy. One black nobleman was the Duke of Marmalade, another the Duke of Lemonade. There was also a Marquis of Ginger Pop.

But the peerage has been abolished. Nowadays Haiti is chiefly known as the land of generals. The latest statistics—which, Haiti fashion, are twenty years old—show an army consisting of 6,500 privates, 7,000 regular officers and 6,500 generals. Those generals who have no horses ride on mules, and the army is clad in the cast-off uniforms of half the regiments of Europe. Some of the men parade without boots, some with cigarettes in their mouths, some with long sticks of sugar cane there; some have rusty swords, the rest walking-sticks.

There are many civilian generals as well. Country squires are usually generals. As every respectable Haitian has a passion for frock coats and silk hats, perspiring generals are often to be seen working in the fields frock-coated, under a burning tropical sun.

Removing Grease Spots

To remove grease from a light Muesarge dampen a circle just outside the spot with turpentine and continue wetting until the center of the spot is reached. Never begin from the center of the spot or a ring will be left after the spot is out. When the place is saturated, put a piece of blotting paper under the material and another over it and press with a warm iron until the spot is gone.

Fat on Soup

When one has not time to let the fat on soup cool and harden, the skimming can be done very quickly and thoroughly with an ordinary kitchen ladle. Pass the ladle very slowly and firmly into the soup until one side of the rim is barely below the surface and the floating fat will run into it. Do not try to get it too full or the soup will run in also. By holding the ladle very firmly below the surface you can get all the fat and almost no soup.

A CANADIAN WONDER

Tunnel Beneath St. Clair River Represents Huge Engineering Undertaking

Comparatively little is known by Canadians of the St. Clair tunnel beneath the river of that name which connects Sarnia and Port Huron, and yet this is one of the notable engineering features of modern railroading. It would at first sight appear almost an impossibility for a railway train to cross a navigable stream by any other means than a bridge. Where a bridge is out of the question a railway ferry is the usual alternative. This is accompanied by more than one drawback. The stream may be choked with ice either floating or solid and there is always the risk of stormy weather. Beyond this the shunting ferry consumes no little valuable time. The necessity of a better method compelled the construction of the St. Clair tunnel, which is in some respects the most remarkable in the world.

The length of the tunnel proper is 6,026 feet and of the open portals or approaches, 5,603 feet, making up more than two miles in all—one of the longest sub-marine tunnels in the world. It is a continuous iron tube, 19 feet, 10 inches in diameter, put together in sections as the work of boring proceeded and firmly bolted together, the total weight of the iron being 56,000,000 pounds. The work was commenced in September, 1888; the tunnel was opened for freight traffic in October, 1891, and passenger trains began running through it in December of the same year.

The work was begun at both sides and carried on until the two sections met in mid-river, and with such accuracy that they were in perfect line. The borings were made by means of cylindrical rams, and as fast as the clay was cut away a section of the iron wall of the tunnel was bolted to its fellow section. The rails of the track rest upon cross ties only six inches apart, laid on stringers, which in turn rest on a bed of brick and cement that fills the bottom of the tube.

TEST YOUR DIAMONDS

Here Are Several Easy Ways to Find Out if the Gems Are Real

The old way of scratching glass with a diamond to test its genuineness is not at all infallible. Any hard substance will scratch glass—a flint, a piece of hard glass, a bit of carbon any of these will scratch glass, but only a genuine diamond will cut.

A little drop of water, if it falls on a real diamond facet, will retain a globular form, and may be moved all over the stone, without braking, on the point of a common steel needle. If the stone be glass, or even a good paste imitation, the water will spread all over the surface.

Again, if you get a little borax and mix it into a paste, by placing the diamond in the flame of an alcohol lamp, having first encased it in the borax paste, you may find out if the stone is genuine by dropping it into a basin of cold water when it is hot. If it be glass, you will find it shivered to pieces, if genuine it will be intact.

You can also use the color test. Get a piece of cotton, or other material which is marked with white and red lines or spots. If an imitation stone be passed over the colors they will appear just as they are; but, if a true diamond be used, then you will not be able to discover any great difference between the colors.

And again: Take a piece of paper and make a small round mark in black. Now look at the mark through the stone. If it be genuine, you will see the mark in its proper shape. If it be an imitation then you will have a confused blur all broken and uneven.

Here is the easiest and most simple test. Drop a suspect stone into a glass of clear water. If it be an imitation its color becomes merged into that of the water—if one can say water has a color—but in the case of a genuine stone it may be seen quite as clearly at the bottom of the glass as if it rested in the hand.

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

—BY—

CLIVE PHILLIPPS WOLLEY

(AUTHOR OF "GOLD, GOLD IN CARIBOO," ETC.)

Supplied Exclusively in Canada by The British & Colonial Press Service, Limited.

It looked about as bad a place to hold against an enemy as you could imagine, lying as it did in a hollow and containing no timber big enough to serve as a shield against rifle bullets; but there was nothing better in sight, and it had just one thing in its favor.

For seven or eight hundred yards at least on one side, and for seven or eight miles on every other side, there was no cover of any kind larger than the thin bushes of sage brush and the patches of bunch grass. A coyote might have crawled through that unseen. It seemed impossible that anything else should.

Realizing that at any moment their enemies might reach the edge of the timber, Rolt and his companions raced over the space intervening between the pines and the cherry bush at headlong speed. When Rolt crashed into the edge of the cherry patch he had not another yard of running power left in him. With a feeling that he had not known since he had won the quarter at Rugby, he dropped where he was and lay still.

"Euchred them so far," panted Al, cheerfully, "and now I guess we'll take some killing. Out with your jack knives, boys, and I'll show you a trick as I learned of the Crees," and he began to back down the boughs and young trees all round him, building with them a kind of "wicky up," or small circular bothy, such as Indians use for bath houses. Over the top of this he threw his blanket, which he had carried strapped to his back until then, and over that again he piled loose soil and sods, keeping a nervous eye all the time on the edge of the timber.

"Chuck your coat over your sticks if you haven't got a blanket," he said to Rolt, "and then fix it this way," and he went down on his knees and began to scratch with his knife like a dog who is going to bury a bone.

All the earth he took out he piled upon the blanket, throwing with it moss and leaves and small boughs, until when he had finished with it it looked like a great ant heap just sufficiently within the cover of the brush to save it from detection.

Then he lent Rolt a hand with his mound, ordering the boys to do the same at their respective corners, and "Shove boys; shove like hell, if you ever want to eat bull beef any more. They ain't here yet, but they can't be long now."

When men are working for their lives it is marvellous how much can be done in a minute, and these men knowing how much depended upon their speed, had their shelters finished, when a low "hist" from Al sent them all into their holes like rabbits into their borrows.

There was no sign of Indians that Rolt could see, but as Al lay motionless he imitated him, and for a full fifteen minutes almost held his breath in his burrow.

At the end of that time he heard a voice behind him, and turning, saw Al lying at full length in the scrub, calmly whittling a pipeful of tobacco.

"They can't see me here," he said. "I'm too far back in the scrub. Have you got your bury good and deep. Keep a whittling of it out so as you can lie low and the bullets'll go over you. Savvy? I'm agoin' out now to take a passear and see if them fortifications look natural."

"Don't be such a fool," commanded the Boss.

"I ain't no fool, Boss. No Injun ever hit a man at a thousand yards, and I've got to know how our little show will strike the gallery. Likewise I'm anxious to know if we have a full house," and so saying, he struck a match and wandered out into the open.

In the most unconcerned way in the world the old fellow strolled along straight towards the timber, smoking as he went, and looking back occasionally at his handiwork, and for about three hundred yards he went unmolested.

Then a shot was fired, the dry earth was kicked up a hundred yards in front of him, and his hat fell on the ground whilst his rifle went to his shoulder, and his own shot was echoed by two more from the cherry patch, under the cover of which tiny volley he dashed back to his lair.

"All right," he said, as he crawled under his mound, "the seats is all took and the currtain's up. It's just three hundred yards to where I dropped my cap, and now I'm goin' to put in time diggin'. If I was you I'd do the same. It's goin' to be safer underground than up a tree by and by," and after that for a long time the Boss saw no more of Al.

CHAPTER XX.

The Chinook wind which had been blowing before midnight had dropped, and in the last hours of darkness had been succeeded by a crisp clear air with more than a suspicion of frost in it, so that when the dawn came, it spread through skies of such rare lucidity as are never seen except in high northern lands.

Along the horizon the light grew gradually, until in the east the heavens were of a pale lemon color, so clear, so utterly fine and transparent, that the gloom of the rigid barrier of pines hurt the eye with its contrast of stiff solidity.

Even the pine belt itself was not quite proof against the dawn. The tops of it were touched with a pale glory and, though the gloom of the black boughs swallowed up the light that struck them, a bole here and there was caught by it and brightened with a wash of tenderest golden grey.

But the prairie welcomed the dawn, which flooded its frost-touched sage brush, so that it rolled in sheets of sparkling silver, from the pines to the cherry patch and away beyond as far as the eye could see towards the still shadowy bed of the Fraser.

The dawn had made all things plain, had emphasised every outline: the peace of it called attention to every least sound which might break the holy stillness of the waking day, and yet Rolt, listening in his burrow, could not hear so much as the breaking of a twig, or see a sign of life in the direction from which he had fled.

Most of the events to which we look forward in life (and probably in death), either with desire or dread, are curiously unlike our forecasts of them. A battle upon either a large or small scale is no exception to this rule. Men laugh in the crisis of a life and death struggle, and in the last South African war a volunteer, told off as one of the escort of a big gun, remembers only of Spion Kop that it was fought on a "jolly" day, that the weather and the smooth grass slopes suggested pink parasols and picnic hampers; that there were funny little balloon-like puffs rising at intervals from the ridge opposite to that on which he lay; that the sun was warm and comforting, and that some confounded fellow woke him up with the toe of a service boot when the battle was over and it was time to take the gun home.

It was with Rolt as it was with that yeoman.

After Al's departure he worked feverishly at the making of his burrow, expecting every moment to hear the hum of bullets through the scrub over head, but no bullets came, and at last, even with his jack knife, he had managed to scrape out a hollow ample enough to contain his body.

Then he lay in it and watched, until the minutes grew into an hour, and the dawn into young day, without any sign of life showing itself upon the landscape, except a coyote, shadowy and utterly noiseless, who came stealing down from the hills, until he was nearly midway between the pines and the cherry patch.

There he checked sharply, his nose went up and his brush dropped, and wheeling in his tracks, he went back at a lope to the nearest rising ground, on which he stood awhile reconnoitring.

Something in the country displeased him, for after a prolonged survey he loped back the way he had come.

The coyote's behavior was suggestive of suspicion, but a little broad-winged hawk which poised in the clear air or swung noiselessly overhead with a keen eye for mice or beetles, contradicted the habitually suspicious vagabond.

Rolt found it impossible to remain strung up to concert pitch for ever in such an atmosphere of peaceful beauty. Just as the half alarmed buck does, when pitted against the everlasting patience of his hunter, and was actually dozing when a voice behind him asked

"Have you got your Holland along with you to-day, Boss?"

Rolt started, but though only half awake, had sense enough to lie still.

"Yes," he said, without turning.

"It's good for long shooting, ain't it?"

"It's sighted for five hundred yards."

"I guess that's good enough. Do you see that yallerish looking bunch of sage brush, the biggest in sight, away there to the right? Jest perforate it, will you?"

Rolt raised his rifle, and looked questioningly at old Al, whose head was now along-side his own.

The old man nodded, and Rolt adjusting his sights to the five hundred yards range, cuddled down on his rifle.

"High or low?" he asked.

"I guess it's most solid near the bottom," chuckled Al.

Then Rolt drew a long breath, for a moment there was absolute silence, and then a little puff of dust, fifty yards beyond the sage brush, recorded the fact that the foresight had been taken too full. A few sprigs of the yellow weed fell, but otherwise there was no sign from the bush.

"Sits stiller nor a fool hen," commented Al. "Try her lower still, Boss."

Rolt took the same bead again, but this time he took it upon the very base of his target. At his second shot the bush which he had watched for an hour became alive. A horrid scream followed the impact of his bullet and in place of the little fountain of golden dust, a man's body sprang high into the air and then pitched headlong on the near side of the bush writhing and tying itself into knots amongst the branches of the withered sage brush.

"Must be quite a holler ther; a'most as good as this one of ourn. I seed him coming from the time he started. Holy smoke!"

Al's ejaculation was the result of a perfect blizzard of bullets which suddenly burst upon the cherry patch, cutting the feeble brush into ribbons and tatters and making the defenders crouch in their lairs like frightened rabbits.

"Fire a good many shots for fifteen Injuns," growled Al. "Liker fifty. It's the hull Chilcoten tribe, blank 'em," and then rising recklessly to his knees, he roared, "Turn it loose, boys. Don't let the beggars get away," and he emptied the magazine of his repeater with a rapidity which would have done credit to a machine gun.

Five minutes earlier the Boss had tired of watching the motionless sage brush over which the hawk had swung and from which that coyote had retreated so promptly, and now whilst the rifles rattled and the smell of powder tainted the air, there were a dozen wild figures dashing from it for the pine belt.

Only two of them fell, and one of these got to his feet again and was hauled into cover by his fellows.

"Blanked bad shootin'. Say, Boss, that shot of yours turned on the hull bloomin' orchestra. How many did you git?"

"I'm afraid I did not touch one of them."

"Guess you're better at sitters. Didn't you spot any of 'em before I told you to shoot at that brush? Lord! I've been watching that fellow over there for nigh on to an hour. It's lucky as I didn't wait for him to come in range of my old shootin' iron."

"Why, what difference would it have made?"

"All the difference between living and dying. They'd have rushed us in another ten minutes, and shooting as we did, they would have got in. But I reckon they won't try that game any more for awhile."

Rolt sincerely hoped that they would not, or that if they did old Al's eyes would keep watch for them. In his own eyes he had lost all confidence.

For a long time silence fell again between the pines and the cherry trees. There was no sound, but for the crack of an occasional twig as one of the defenders moved uneasily in his narrow shelter; no movement except from that twisted figure by the sage brush.

It was a long time before that became quite still, and Rolt was thankful when that time came.

Before the attempted rush the sage brush had been equally still, and the memory of that fact so worried Rolt that he now began to imagine enemies in the most ridiculous grass patches. He was beginning to lose his sense of proportion and imagination magnified the most absurd trifles.

It was a relief when a single shot broke the strain of long waiting. The bullet dropped about a couple of hundred yards from the cherry patch and ricochetted through the highest branches of it. There was a slight pause and then a second shot from the same spot in the timber, the bullet dropping this time a hundred yards nearer Al's screen.

"Jest so," muttered Al, who had again crawled to Rolt's side, "and the next will be nearer still. They are getting our range now. Had ought to have done that the first go off. I guess there'll be no room here for two now. Lie low, boys, it's goin' to storm again," and he crawled back to his own position just as it began again to hail bullets.

For a good quarter of an hour the Indians in the timber kept up a steady stream of independent firing, as if they would fill up that little hollow with lead or reap the thin cover in it with their concentrated fire, but though their bullets cut down the standing brush as if it had been slashed, riddled it, and left it in flying tatters, the men under ground remained untouched. Neither did they attempt to reply.

"Don't stir, boys, and don't shoot back," commanded Al. "When they think they've killed every insect in this bloomin' brush patch, they'll maybe try some other racket. Then we'll get our work in."

CHAPTER XXI.

The Indians were very thorough in their work of destruction, and thanks to the looting of Rolt's store-house they had plenty of ammunition to spare, but at last even they were satisfied.

The cherry patch looked like a field after a Manitoban hail storm, and there could have been little doubt in the Chilcoten's minds that anything that had sheltered in it was as dead as Julius Caesar. But being Indians the elected to run no risks. When the firing ceased a sound of chopping began, and Rolt who should have known better, imagined that the cold-blooded brutes were going to feed before picking up their birds, but he misjudged them. An Indian is sufficiently cold-blooded, but not on the hunting trail or the war path. Then he thinks a great deal less of his belly than does a white man under similar circumstances.

Before long a great tree crashed down, and before the sound of its fall had died away, they saw the top of another lean slowly over, hang for a moment, and then disappear in a spray of shattered boughs and pine needles.

Three fell in all, and still the chopping went on. Then for the first time Rolt noticed what looked like a great saw log just outside the line of the pine trees, lying parallel with that line, and as he noticed it two more came to join it.

There was no doubt that they came; he saw them emerge slowly, like some footless monsters, moving sideways down the hill.

"Ah, here they come! They're gettin' down to business at last. That's more like Cree fightin'! I wouldn't have thought that they knowed so much," muttered Al.

But at first Rolt, who had not Al's experience, did not understand, and the sight of those three great pine logs creeping down abreast, apparently by their own volition, was very horrible.

From time to time a rifle spat redly from the timber, but for the most part the slow progress of the logs down the sloping prairie was made in absolute silence. The sun creeping across the heavens seemed to move faster than they did.

"We've got to get them other two over this side," said Al. "We can't stop them," pointing to the logs, "and when they get here there'll be a blanked hot time in the cherry patch."

"Can we spare them? Won't the Indians sneak round from behind?"

"Not likely, and if they do we've got to risk it, I guess they'll wipe us out this time," with which cheering remark he crept away, returning with Toma.

"I've left the other galloot where he was," he explained. "He ain't any account as a rifle shot, but he's so plum scared that he'll make a pretty smart looking man. Hulloh! What's got that log?"

The centre log had reached the spot where Al's hat lay, and as it passed over it, possibly one of the hands which propelled the log reached for the derelict "Stetson" which had been the old man's pride. At the same time the slope of the prairie increased suddenly, and this particular log had been trimmed too fine. By nature it had grown absolutely round, it was a white pine and young, and therefore smooth and heavy, and the men who had trimmed it had taken all the limbs off close to the trunk.

The result was that though it had crawled as slowly as its companions up to this point, as soon as it felt the sharper incline it began to turn over more freely, each revolution giving additional impetus, until it was obviously rolling.

Already it was twenty feet ahead of its companions, and then for a moment a brown hand showed above it. Al's rifle came to his shoulder, but he was too slow; the hand disappeared before he could press the trigger.

"Look out, Rolt," he cried. "They cain't hold it! It's got away with them! If they cain't stop it, they're our meat, sure," and he stood up recklessly to get a better chance with his rifle.

Faster and faster came the log, and again a hand showed, and this time an arm and shoulder with it, and the old man fired, but the arm, broken at the wrist, had fallen behind the log, before his bullet chipped the bark of it.

"Bully for you, Rolt. I take it all back about them sitters." But Rolt did not even smile. His lips were thin now and set, and his eyes were glued to that log, whilst he held his rifle as men hold their guns at the pigeon traps at Hurlingham.

If the covering party in the timber had been able to hit a haystack at seven hundred yards, the fate of Al and Rolt would have been sealed, for in the excitement of the moment both men stood up, every thought intent upon their pray, utterly regardless of the leaden bees which hummed harmlessly past them.

And then the expected happened. Four men however desperate cannot hold a green pine tree from behind when it begins to roll, and realizing this, one of the Indians let go and bolted back towards the timber. He fell with Rolt's bullet between his shoulders and Al's through his thigh before he had gone a dozen paces.

NOT TO BE WAITED ON

A Housewife Writes on the Subject of Hired Men

I think that the most of the hired men look to be waited on too much, writes an Ontario housewife. We have two hired men the year round. We have had some good ones, but sorry to say some very, very, oh, very bad ones! And if they were not afraid to turn themselves to help the housewife, I think it would be better for them. I have often laughed to see them go to the water pail for a drink and none in it. They would take the dipper and go to the pump and get their drink and come in with the empty dipper. Now, was it going to hurt them to take the pail and bring it in full? I believe to live and let live, but I do not believe in hiring a man and waiting on him when they are so mean, nor do I not believe in a woman bossing the hired man but I think it is her place, if he does anything wrong in the house to speak to him quietly about it, and he should not think she is trying to boss him because she has spoken to him.—Canadian Farm.

BIRCH BARK CLOTHING

Port Arthur Finlander Sets a New Fashion in Men's Apparel

The latest novelty in men's wear consists of a coat constructed of birch bark. The coat was worn by a Finlander who passed along the thoroughfares of Port Arthur, Ont., seemingly unconscious of the curiosity aroused by his novel upper covering.

The material was strips of the inner bark about an inch wide and of indeterminate lengths. These strips were interwoven after the manner in which a basket is made, but were shaped to the form of the body.

From the neck, part of the strips were carried down to the shoulders and continued to the wrist for the arms. The strips were woven diagonally down the front and back and turning up at the bottom of the coat were carried on the same plan up to the collar thus forming what tailors call a self-lining.

The coat was made double breasted held together by hooks and strings. The only part of the garment that was not knitted together was that under the arms, where strings were used to form the union. The reason for this probably was to make the arms more pliable, for while the coat was not exactly board-stiff it was not what one could truthfully designate as wholly pliable.

Fellow countrymen who accompanied the Finlander said that three hundred feet of birch bark strips were used in the construction of the coat and that it took three days' time to complete the garment.

THE FUR INDUSTRY

Supply in Canada Rapidly Diminishing —Must Be Conserved

That something should be done to stem the upward trend of prices in furs throughout the Dominion, due to the serious decrease in Canadian fur bearing animals, is the opinion of the commission of conservation, and with this end in view Mr. Walter Jones, as expert of the commission, conducted an investigation as to the possibilities of breeding fur-bearing animals in captivity, along similar lines to the black fox industries in Prince Edward Island. The investigation was conducted throughout the five eastern provinces of Canada, and took three months to complete.

Mr. Jones' report demonstrates that the supply of valuable Canadian fur-bearing animals is diminishing with alarming rapidity, especially during the past ten or fifteen years. The decrease is ascribed to the increasing outdoor habits of the people, and to the tremendous demand for fur and leather, resultant upon the growth of automobile traffic. It is calculated that upon an average the price of furs has increased over 200 per cent. during the past decade, while many varieties of fur, such as the marten and the fisher, have reached prices prohibitive in their nature. In fact, Mr. Jones estimates that at the present rate furs will be a luxury only to be enjoyed by the very rich in twenty years' time.

The success of fox breeding in captivity is believed by Mr. Jones to be an inspiration toward the breeding in the same manner of other fur-bearers notably of the family of Mustelidae, including such animals as the marten, mink, fisher, otter, skunk, ermine and wolverine, all of which have exceedingly valuable pelts.

It is recognized that the farming of those animals cannot be as profitable as the black fox industry. The investigation conducted by Mr. Jones took him through the farms of Prince Edward Island, and he states that the revenues are enormous in many cases.

That Terrible Fatigue Can Be Overcome

A Simple Home Remedy Now Cures Lack of Energy, Loss of Ambition, and a Feeling of "Don't Care."

Successful in Nearly Every Case.

That miserable nervousness and half-sick tired-all-the-time condition is due nine cases in ten to a clogged-up system. You grow irritable and despondent, you lack ambition, energy seems all gone. Surest road to health is by the frequent use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they will make you feel like new all over in a short time.

Writing from his home in Barcelona, Mr. Frederick G. Mayer states: "I think no one ever suffered as severely as I did for nearly six months. So many serious symptoms were developing as a consequence of this evil condition of my system that I realized I must find a remedy. The strong pills of various kinds I tried seemed after their first effects were over to make me far worse and I did not know which way to turn for relief. I saw Dr. Hamilton's Pills advertised, and the first box used satisfied me. I found a true remedy. Instead of griping with undue activity, Dr. Hamilton's Pills acted as naturally as if physic had not been taken. I never had to increase the dose, and, indeed, within a month I reduced it, and when the system finally acted of its own accord as a result of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, I took a dose twice a week only, just to make sure the old condition would not come back."

No other remedy cures constipation and billiousness so easily or safely as Dr. Hamilton's Pills; they are an ideal family remedy for all disease of the stomach liver and bowles. Sold in 25c. boxes, five for $1.00, all druggists and storekeepers or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and Kingston, Canada.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars nad testimonials.

NEW WAY TO BANISH ALL HAIRY GROWTHS

(Modes of To-day.)

Many people will be interested in the new and simple treatment by which hair or fuzz can be permanently removed from the face, neck, or arms. This consists in making a paste with plain powdered delatone and water and applying to hairy surface. After two or three minutes it is rubbed off, the skin washed and every trace of hair has vanished. This is a painless, harmless method and seldom requires the second application to remove even a stubborn growth, and it is so simple to use that failure cannot result.

Straggly eyebrows can be made to grow thick and beautifully lustrous by rubbing pyroxin on frequently, and to make short, straight eyelashes come in long and silky, apply pyroxin at lash-roots with thumb and forefinger. Use care and don't get any pyroxin where no hair is wanted.

ONE YEAR SINCE MURDER

New york, July 16.—Former Pplice Lieutenant Charles S. Becker and his gun men in Sing Sing Prison, undoubtedly recalled to-day that this is the anniversary of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, whose threats to expose the so-called police system of graft made him the victim of the murder plot which Becker instigated. The year which has elapsed has been replete with even greater exposures of police conditions than might have come from Rosenthal's story, for his death which resulted in a dozen convictions of the policeand their allies in the alliances with criminals. 2

CANNED DRAMA VERY EDUCATIONAL

The moving pictures carry wonderful stories of education for the proletariat. "Cava sans dire" that scenes of foreign travel, etc. are educational. Still, some of the dramas, as presented on the screen, convey a series of educational interest that would be doubted if read in a book or shown on the stage would be almost discredited.

For instance, last week a drama was shown in a local moving picture house that in its first scene showed a pretty little flaxen haired girl with blue eyes. A change of reels, and the child is shown at the age of 15 with black eyes and dark hair. Again another reel shows two prospectors in the Rocky Mountains. They find an old dying prospector in a cave with his charming daughter. The daughter has never been in civilized districts or had communication with such places. Still this little girl of the mountains wears French corsets and high-heeled shoes. Later on in the same play, this maid of the mountains, having been adopted by two young prospectors, and loved by both, raises the demon of jealousy in their respective hearts. The young men decide on a fight to death with knives. They go out in the prairie and start the fight. The girl sees the fight begin and rides 26 miles for help. She and the holy father she summons arrives, after her 52 mile ride, just as the third round starts. Joy, wassail and wedding bells! Still, what's the use? The public is amused for 5 cents.

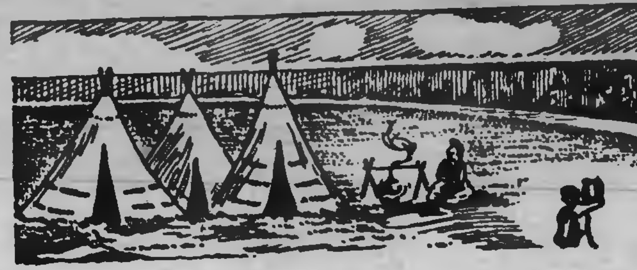
Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"



PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.

PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.

FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

ENGLANDS' KING DECLARES IRELAND MUST NOT FIGHT

His Majesty's Influence is More of Factor Than Public Generally Believes

London, July 17.—The King's influence is a far greater factor in the Home Rule position than the public imagines.

While carefully preserving his position as constitutional monarch he has expressed the greatest anxiety that any changes in the Irish system government be carried out peacefully with the fullest possible measure of Irish approval.

His Majesty could not fail to be impressed by the assurance of his personal friend, Lord Londonderry, and others, that as things now are going Home Rule means certain civil war in North Ireland.

Nothing they declare, can restrain the 25,000 Ulstermen including a large section of the hot-headed Orangemen from open violence and armed resistence of the law; moreover officers of the army who have his Majesty's confidence make no secret of their determination to resign the King's commission and assist Ulster's resistence to Dublin Rule. It is noteworthy last night in the Lords, Lord Morley made quite clear that the Government refused to regard Ulster's attitude as mere bluff, though he could not admit Ulster's right to hold up the national settlement of the Irish problem.

Asquith Will Force Home Rule.

Moreover last week in the Commons Premier Asquith declared the Government had no intention of using British troops to enforce Home Rule upon objecting Ulstermen, but the Irish Nationalists take no such view.

They know Ireland cannot be financed with Belfast under the present scheme.

Freeman's Journal says: "Threats and preparations of Ulstet no matter how loudly advertised will not be allowed to deflect the Ministry from the path of progress. Law will be broken when the Home Rule bill becomes a statute and law breakers will be made amenable. If violence is threatened steps will be taken to prevent it. Measures of ordered national government are not to be suspended by the bluster of a section."

GREAT BRITAIN HAS SPENT MONEY FREELY FOR OUR DEVELOPEMENT

What Cold Figures Say Regarding the Plea That We Owe Britain Nothing

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, July 17.—The contention that "Canada owes nothing to England," had to do originally with the naval defence question pure and simple. It has recently been made to embrace every conceivable point upon which the plain duty of Canada is acknowledged by all right-thinking men to rest.

Has Injured Canada.

Canadian financiers are coming back from London with the news that the action in killing the naval aid bill has greatly injured the position of Canada from a borrowing standpoint. Britain has for years provided Canada with capital for great works of development and Britain has not only provided capital but provided it on more generous terms than she has accorded to any other borrower. Sentiment has led the British people to supply their own fellow-subjects oversea with money at least one per cent. cheaper than foreign countries, and Sir Edgar Speyer calculated recently that the annual interest saving to the Dominions and Dependencies is at least £10,000,000, a very handsome preference. In other words for the same payments of interest these countries have been able to raise £250,000,000 additional capital.

Bought Colonial Stocks.

Moreover, to the detriment, be it said, of Consols, Great Britain has added to her list of Trustee stocks about £650,000,000 of Colonial and Indian stocks and thus enabled the Dominion, Provincial and State Governments' of the Empire to raise money on far more favourable terms than would otherwise have been possible. When questions are raised as to the return which Great Britain gives to the trade preferences of the Dominions, the enormous advantages the latter gain by the preferential treatment of their issues, both by the people and the government of Great Britain, should not be forgotten. If some great convulsion checks the flow of capital from Great Britain no other lender will be found from whom such terms can be obtained.

COL. SAM HUGHES ACTIVE MINISTER

Many Armouries Being Built Through Country

Ottawa, July 17.—Rapid progress is being made by Col. Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, in his policy of eqipping the militia with drill halls. At the present time there are nineteen under contract, tenders have been called for twenty-five more, and tenders are under consideration for eight more, making a total of 52. These drill halls are all being erected by the Militia Department. The military authorities have long been asking for more armory accommodation, especially in the rural districts, and in the West, and particularly as exorbitant rents are often charged for quarters. The Public Works Department have been loaded up with works of great magnitude and in the past has been inclined to show little interest in the erection of small two company drill halls, but it has now been arranged that the smaller drill halls are to be built by the Militia Department.

The policy of accommodating the smaller units with cheap armouries is of importance from the standpoint of mobilization, since it is possible when a company has a suitable building to store in it the full equipment which it would need if called out for active service. It needs no technical knowledge to see the advantage of having a corps able to outfit its local headquarters without having to requisition any other place for stores.

It is interesting to note that Col. Hughes has adopted as a policy that all sites should be granted free. As a result he has been given free sites by towns, cities and municipalities all over Canada, saving hundreds of thousands of dollars for the Government.

MERVINS BULL RAN AND SWAM AMUCK

Yesterday as a bull was being led to Jack Mervin's abbatoir, near the G.T.R. bridge above the locks, the animal became unruly and, pulling the rope out of the attendant's hand, ran on the bridge. It's headlong flight caused the bull to fall into the river. It swam to Collin's Lock and was here fished out by ropes. Its immersion in the wet water of the Otonabee had evidently not cooled its madness. When it was brought to the land, the big animal again "ran amuck" and had to be shot. So that instead of furnishing meat for bologna sausage, the big bull only returned its value in the price of its hide.

How a Dying Man Became a Protestant

The following from The Orange Sentinel, has been handed to The Times with the request that it be published:

T. M. Carleton, writing in the Christian, says: Some time ago I was staying with a friend in the South of Ireland, when he related to me the following story of a mixed marriage. The husband, a Roman Catholic, permitted his wife to have their six children brought up as Protestants. When the husband was on his deathbed, his wife said to him: "You were always a Roman Catholic; and if you wish, I will send into town for a priest to come and see you."

"Yes," he said, "send for Father B——."

She sent a messenger, requesting the priest to come at once. He came, and when alone in the room with the dying man, he said: "You have six children who require to be educated and provision made for them. You have made no provision, but if you and your wife will sign a paper giving us control every provision will be made for their future, and your wife's mind will be freed from any anxiety concerning them I will come again to-morrow and another priest with me, and the paper can be signed."

In the meantime the man told his wife what the priest proposed, and she declined to have anything to do with it. The following day the two priests came, and after reading the paper, the leader asked the man to sign it. He refused, and said: "My wife has been a good wife and a good mother to her children, and I don't wish to giver her any trouble."

The priest replied: "You must not allow sentiment to come between your children and eternal salvation, as they cannot be saved outside the Catholic Church, and this will not take effect till afeer your death."

The man still refused, when the two priests stretched their hands over the dying man, and repeated this curse:

"Let him be accursed at home and abroad, accursed in the city and the field, accursed in waking and sleeping, accursed in eating and drinking, accursed in walking and sitting. In his flesh and in his bones, from the sole of his foot to the crown of his head, let him have no soundness. Be his name blotted out from the book of the living, and not written with the righteous. Let him perish in the day of judgment, and let everlasting fire devour him with the devil and his angels."

The poor man looked up and said: "The man who could curse a dying man is not God's man; go out of my house, the two of you, and I will send for the Protestant Parson to come and Baptize me a Protestant."

After the priests departed the wife sent for my friend—who is not a parson, but "a sinner saved by grace"—and he pointed her husband to Christ as "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." Before he died my friend had the joy of knowing he was depending solely on the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, which cleanseth us from all sin; and not on priest, parson, church, or sacrament.

CHINESE REBELS ATTACK GERMANS

Pekin, July 16.— The German consulate at Nanking was surrounded to-day by insurgents. It was stated that in the event of an attack the germans intended to adopt their own measures for their protection. The trouble apparently arose owing to the Germans recently permitting the extradition of two revolutionaries who had taken refuge in the German concession at Hankow.

BILLIONS MORE FOR CANADA

Gov. Foss Issues Statement Sees Big Developments

Boston, July 17.—Governor Foss to-day issued a statement regarding the movement of the United States manufacturers in Canada. He declared that in addition to the three to five hundred millions that have already gone across the border there are billions more to go.

The Governor says: "I find that up to January 11, 1913, approximately 175 American companies had established themselves in Canada.

"He gives a list of the American concerns now located there and particularly points out that one is the American Blower Company of which United States Secretary of Commerce Redfield was the president.

Movement to Continue.

"I believe that this movement of American capital toward Canada is to continue. I believe that it will greatly increase from year to year under the present fiscal systems in both countries.

"Undoubtedly the development of Canada in this next twenty-five years will be relatively greater than in the United States. This fact impels enterprising concerns to fortify themselves by locating within Canadian borders.

Controlled From Across Border.

"In many instances the plants which our manufacturers are establishing in Canada will be directly owned and financed by the parent concerns in this country and in some instances, even the pay roll is met by the weekly shipment of funds from the American parent concern to its branch in Canada."

"I believe it is a conservative statement to say that up-to-date, at least five hundred millions of American money has been imported into Canada in the building of American properties across the border."

SAVED FRIEND FROM AN AWFUL DEATH

Woman Struck by Rear Coach of a Train Has Narrow Escape.

Toronto, July 17.—Prompt action and the presence of mind of Mrs. J. Harrison, of Leaside avenue, saved the life of her friend, Miss Johnson, this morning at the C.P.R. Leaside Station. The two ladies had just returned from a shopping trip to town and after alighting from the train went to pass around the rear end of it across the tracks.

Just as Miss Johnson had stepped out in the middle of the tracks the train was backed up and she was struck by the buffer beam of the rear coach. As she was falling Mrs. Harrison grabbed her by the hair and by a superhuman effort dragged her clear of the tracks and saved her from certain death.

Miss Johnson is suffering from no injuries beyond a few bruises, while Mrs. Harrison in reaching forward to grab her friend was herself struck on the shoulder by the train. She is the wife of a C.N.R. employe living at Leaside.

CITIZENS PICNIC GREATEST IN HISTORY OF PETERBOROUGH

6000 People Attended and Enjoy 1st Annual Outing of Retail Merchants Association

The first annual picnic of the Retail Merchants' Association of Peterborough will go down in local history with two comments. First, it was the biggest and most successful affair of its kind that Peterborough has ever seen: secondly, it demonstrated that a change has come over the complexion of local trade conditions. The co-operative theory has brought the retail merchants to a concrete and determined unity. It used to be that a grocer would look at his fellow dispenser of sugar, soap etc., with that loving glance that a tabby cat bestows on an alert bull dog, the hardware and drygoods dealers used to regard one another about as fondly as they would a cheque returned from the bank marked "no funds." However, the Granger idea of co-operative stores has awakened the merchants and yesterday's unique turn out that real success is attended by individual effort with a co-operation for the general good.

Shortly after the noon hour, the steamers Rainbow and Geneva left the street car wharf, at hourly intervals, sometimes with scows attached, and in every case every legal foot of space was covered by happy picnicers. The sail to the fine T.A.S. Park was enjoyable. The hot rays of old Sol were tempered by a breeze.

At the Park, tents, refreshment booths and whirly-go-rounds were well patronized. Many drove down in rigs and autos. A conservative estimate places the attendance at 6000.

A fine list of both land and aquatic sports was pulled off. During the sports, Mayor Bradburn, who took an active part in conducting the former, delivered a short address at the pavilion complimenting the merchants on the successful result of their picnic. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., was present and displayed much interest in the event. Two bands were in attendance and every one seemed to be actuated by the carnival spirit. Great credit is due for the success of the picnic to the splendid organization of the committees and to Messrs. T. Barrie, President and N. C. Cameron, secretary of the Association. The steamers were kept busy until a late hour bringing back the crowds. The street car company is worth more than a passing notice for the splendid manner in which they handled the crowd.

MISSTATEMENTS AND RACIAL APPEALS IN BRUCE ELECTION

Below are Samples of the Efforts Being Made by Liberals In S. Bruce

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, July 17.—The prospect of a by-election in the Ontario riding of South Bruce provides an opportunity for the free dissemination of gross misstatements and of appeals to racial feelings by Laurier newspapers. Here is a sample from the Toronto Globe:

"Among the many subjects of political interest coming up in the bye-election campaign three are of special import: the farmers' market for their agricultural produce, the dangerously and needlessly rapid increase in the annual expenditure, and the Borden-Government's proposal to spend thirty-five million of dollars on three warships for use in the Mediterranean Sea, if not in the German Ocean. Some of those who addressed the convention which nominated Mr. Cargill complained that the offer of these vessels had been "misrepresented" as AN INSULT TO GERMANY AND THE GERMAN PEOPLE; THERE IS NO MISREPRESENTATION IN SO CHARACTERIZING IT: THE EPITHET EXACTLY FITS THE PROPOSAL. All the pleas put forward in support of it are based on the assumption that the vessels are needed as a precaution against Germany, though there has been unbroken peace between that country and Great Britain since the German Empire came into existence more than fourty years ago. The Borden naval contribution is also insulting to Australia because it is made in violation of a solemn agreement entered into in 1909 and based on the unanimous opinion of Parliament, which then favored the creation of a Canadian fleet in co-operation with the Australian one for use on the Pacific Ocean.

Same old Appeal.

The appeal to a racial feeling in this paragraph is undisguised. It is the same sort of appeal which Hon. W. L. M. King made in North Waterloo and because of which he dares not risk another candidature in that riding. The Globe repeats the appeal with the recklessness characteristic of the Globe's attitude in a desperate cause.

Here Is Another.

It also repeats the misstatement that Canada in 1909 entered into an agreement for the building of a Canadian fleet in co-operation with the Australian one for use on the Pacific Ocean. This is a little brazen even for the Globe. The facts, as every well-informed man knows, are that when at the Imperial Conference of 1909, it was proposed that Canada should co-operate with Australia in the defence of the Pacific Canada, in the person of Sir Wilfrid Laurier flatly refused. There was some talk of autonomy and of a purely Canadian navy, and the result, so far as Canada and the Pacific are concerned, was—the Rainbow.

It would seem that the Globe underestimates the intelligence of the South Bruce electorate.

NO INCREASE IN BRITISH NAVY IS CHURCHILL'S VIEW

Sees Nothing in International Situation to Warrent Hasty Construction

London, July 17.—The British Admiralty has no intention of adding further warships to its construction programme for 1914-15, according to an announcement made by Winston Church, First Lord of the Admiralty, in the course of a statement made in the House of Commons to-day on the debate on the shipbuilding vote. Mr. Churchill said he knew of nothing in the international situation necessitating an increase and he did not think anything accuring in the Mediterranean in connection with the proposed Austrian and Italian warship construction would require Great Britain to depart from her present programme.

As a result of the rejection of the Canadian naval bill the British Government, said Mr. Churchill, would accelerate the construction of three warships which would therefore be ready in the third quarter of 1915, and this would fill the gap which otherwise would be created.

Canadians Still to Contribute.

Mr. Churchill added that he did not think the question of Canadian contribution to the defence of the Empire closed and there was no reason to suppose that Great Britain would be left to face emergencies in the future unaided. There was an overwhelming concensus of opinion in Canada, he declared, that early action should be taken in one form or another.

LABOR CHARGES BRANDED AS A MOST MALICIOUS LIE

Toronto, July 17.—Trouble is brewing between the various immigration organizations in the Dominion and the labor leaders over the contention of the latter that conditions in Canada are being grossly misrepresented and that men from the Old Country are brought out here under a false impression of the labor situation in the Dominion.

A warning to that effect has just been issued by the Trades and Labor Congress at Ottawa. Charges are also made that profit seeking societies are dumping every month, hundreds of penniless emigrants in Canada. Every city in the Dominion, it is asserted, had more than its share of unemployed.

Mr. Frank Wise, Chairman of the governing committee of the Imperial Home Re-Union Association, interviewed this morning, angrily dismissed the statements as a "tissue of malicious lies," and expressed regret that unions should resort to such practices in order to secure control of the industrial situation.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 3[illegible] George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

TREE THAT EXHIBITS ANGER

In Idaho a Species Quakes and Emits an Unpleasant Odor When Disturbed.

In Idaho there exists a species of the acacia tree which is entitled to be classed as one of the wonders of plant life. This tree, Harper's Weekly states, attains a height of about eight feet. When full grown it closes its leaves together in coils each day at sunset and curls its twigs to the shape of pigtails. When the tree has thus settled itself for its night's sleep it is said that if touched it will flutter as if agitated or impatient at the disturbance. The oftener, it is averred, the foliage is molested, the more violent will become the shaking of the branches. Finally, it is further alleged, if the shaking be continued, the tree will at length emit a nauseating odor quite sufficient to induce a headache in the case of the person disturbing the tree.

In Idaho it is called the "angry tree" and it is said that it was discovered by men who, on making camp for the night, placed one end of a canvas covering over one of the sensitive branches, using it for a support. Immediately the tree began to jerk its branches sharply. The motion continued, with increasing "nervousness," until at last came a sickening odor that drove the tired campers to a more friendly location.

Curiosity prompted an investigation. One of the "angry trees" was dug up and thrown to one side. Immediately upon being removed from the ground it is said that the tree opened its leaves, its twigs lost their pigtails and for something over an hour and a half the outraged branches showed their indignation by a series of quakings, which grew weaker and weaker and ceased when the foliage had become limp and withered.

FULL-MOUTHED SHEEP

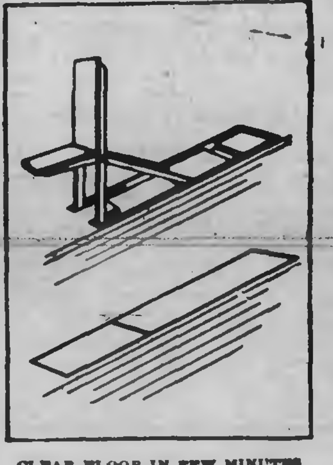
Good Teeth a Prime Requisite to Successful Feeding

At two years of age a sheep's teeth are in their prime; at three, four and even five years of age they are usually in good working order; but it is rare to find a sheep older than that that has a good set of teeth. When a sheep gets to be six or seven years old its teeth become long, sharp and brittle and they break off very easily, if, indeed, they have not worn off by that time. A broken-mouthed sheep can not eat either grass or grains to advantage. Proper mastication is important to the complete digestion of food in the case of a sheep, as it is in the case of man, and a broken-mouthed sheep labors under a handicap both in not being able to eat very much and in not being able to get much good from what it does eat. It does not pay ordinarily to keep such a sheep in the flock. It often seems hard to sacrifice a ewe that has given good service, but no matter how good a lamb a ewe has had in her younger days, in this condition she is not likely to again be able to produce, or nurse a lamb. Those who buy sheep should investigate their mouths carefully and see that they have good teeth, as good teeth are one of the prime requisites to successful feeding.

FOLDING THEATRE CHAIR

Collapses Into Floor and Leaves Flat Space Above.

Here is the latest idea in the design of a theatre chair. It folds up perfectly flat and drops into a space in the floor behind it. A pair of straight standards with a board across their upper half, to form the back of the chair, are hinged to the floor. The seat is hinged to the back and is supported in horizontal position by two legs that slant up from the floor at the back and hold the back in a reclining position.



CLEAR FLOOR IN FEW MINUTES.

It is not likely that a seat of this type would ever supersede the chairs in first-class theatres, but in small auditoriums, that are often used for other purposes when there is no play in town, it should prove very convenient. In a few minutes a couple of men could clear the floor by collapsing the chairs into the spaces behind them.

EDIBLE MUSHROOMS

Simple Rules to be Followed in Order to Avoid Poisonous Varieties

It is not hard to distinguish edible mushrooms from poisonous varieties. The common mushroom (agaricus campestris) is usually found in open grassy fields, often on old pasture and lawns, but never in the woods. It has a fleshy cap, dun colored on top and pink beneath, the pink gills turning dark brown or black when mature and after gathering. There are many other good varieties, but the agaricus is the commonest. Mushrooms which are gathered in the open which have pink gills that turn brown or black after being gathered, it is safe to eat.

The two poisonous varieties which are most common are the amanita muscaria and the amanita phalloides. They are usually found in or near woods. They have yellow or white gills, and the stem of the latter rises from a cup-like base. Mushrooms gathered in the woods, which have yellow or white gills (not pink) or have cup attachments at the base of their stem, should be shunned; they are probably poisonous.

A Canadian Baroness

A girl of twelve years of age won a peerage claim before the committee of privileges of the House of Lords. She is Mary Frances Katherine Petre, daughter of Baroness Petre, the widow of the fourteenth baron. Her mother made the petition in behalf of her daughter, claiming the barony of Furnivall, and submitting the pedigree, which started in 1232, when the first Lord of Furnivall sat in Parliament. The girl is a grand-daughter of the late Professor William Clark, Trinity College, his daughter having married the fourteenth Baron Petre. She is the lady who established the claim of her daughter to the barony of Furnivall.

FISH WEALTH OF CANADA

Important Industry of the Lakes—Salmon as an Experiment

The fishing industry of Canada is an important asset in our national financial statement. It is one of those subjects on which little has been written in a form which is interesting to the general public, although much valuable information may be found in Government blue books. The average yearly catch for the Dominion is valued at about $30,000,000, about half of which is exported and the other half consumed at home—about $2.00 worth of fish per year being the average consumption for each Canadian.

The Port Arthur Hatchery

The latest fish hatchery is the one at Port Arthur on Lake Superior. This hatchery has an annual capacity of turning out fish fry, which, at maturity, will represent a catch of the enormous total of $10,500,000 yearly. The hatchery is equipped for the propagation mainly of lake trout, as owing to the rocky and clay formation of Lake Superior, trout find their native haunts on the shores of the Lake. A certain percentage of white fish are also being hatched out, as there are a few handy spawning beds in the smaller bays, which form the native haunt of the white fish. A very interesting experiment is also being tried out in the placing of salmon fry in the lake as it is believed that a very valuable salmon fishing industry can be established at Port Arthur.

Fishing as a sport is also being given serious attention at this hatchery, and brook trout and salmon fry are to be placed in the streams and brooks surrounding the city.

RED HAIRED GIRLS

Spinsters With Auburn Locks Rarely Seen in England

Though red hair of the Titian tint remains at least till middle age, a correspondent of the London Daily Mail points out that until the other day he had never seen or heard of a red haired spinster.

"I know that real red hair in girls and women is rare nowadays, and anthropological experts say that the red haired race is fast disappearing. A friend to whom I mentioned my one and only meeting with a red haired spinster told me that he had always heard that there was not a spinster to be found whose head was crowned with the real red hair." A member of the Royal Anthropological Institute said: "I am inclined to think that few if any girls with the Titian tinted hair fail to get married. Men like them and they are quickly married."

The Examiner printed an item the other day stating that a Toronto man who saved a girl from drowning a year ago, is now snubbed by her. Doubtless he is grieved by such ungrateful treatment, but The Times would advise him to cheer up and not be foolish, for she might have married him.

PENNSYLVANIA'S EUGENIC MARRIAGE LAW.

Pennsylvania's so-called eugenic marriage law now needs only the signature of Governor Tener to make it effective. The law requires both parties seeking a marriage license to swear that they are not afflicted with any transmissible disease. The sponsor for the bill declares that at the next session of the Legislature he intends to introduce a bill to prevent the issuance of marriage license to persons afflicted with tuberculosis.

But this is not the whole length to which it is proposed to go, for the bill provides that no marriage license shall be issued where either of the contracting parties is an imbecile, epileptic, of unsound mind or under guardianship as a person of unsound mind. It also prevents the granting of a marriage license to any male person who has been, within five years, an inmate of a county asylum or home for indigent persons, unless it appears the cause of such condition has been removed and he is able to support a family.

This is driving home eugenics with a vengeance, and prompts the question whether there is not danger of getting too much of a good thing in the matter of marriage regulation. Evidently the Ne Temere decree is not in force in Pennsylvania.

Do Your Looks Quite Satisfy You?

IF YOUR COLOR IS BAD, IF YOU SUFFER FROM PIMPLES, HERE IS GOOD ADVICE.

Fine Results in Two Weeks

Miss Nettie E. Callaghan, a well-known young lady in Middleton, writes as follows: "I was affected for two years with a rash and ugly looking pimples that spread over my face. My color was poor, and my blood evidently completely out of order. Certainly it was a most despairing sort of a case, because various treatments did but little to help me. A friend of mine in Toronto, Ont., advised me to get Dr. Hamilton's Pills, so I sent at once for five boxes. In two weeks I felt like new—looks improved, spirits rose, and I felt I was getting well. I have used this remedy for a long time, and now wouldn't be without it."

If you are in ailing health, have blood disorders, stomach trouble, or headaches, Dr. Hamilton's Pills will help you quickly. All druggists and storekeepers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. 25c. per box, five for $1.00. Sent postpaid by the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Ont.

HIS WIFE'S DRESS

A very unusual case has just been decided in a Montreal court, where Senator J. H Cloran was found liable for $213 for an Irish lace dress and cloak supplied to his wife. The details are extraordinary to a remarkable degree. Senator Cloran's defence was based upon the claim that a certain contractor had agreed to pay for the dress and cloak in return for the Senator's influence which was to be exerted to secure for the contractor certain work in connection with the construction of the Royal Victoria museum at Ottawa, a government building. Senator Cloran's father-in-law had the main contract for the building but he refused to be influenced by the Senator, and the contractor failed to get his job. Incidentally he refused to pay for Mr. Cloran's wife's dress. When suit was brought for the money the Senator tried to evade liability by bringing in the contractor, who acknowledged that the dress had been promised on condition that he secured the desired work. The whole incident places Senator Cloran in a somewhat unfavorable light and makes people regret that members of the Senate are appointed for life terms.

ELECTRICITY FROM PEAT

Bavaria Trying Out Commodity of Which Canada has Deposits

European engineers are engaged in the investigation of methods of utilizing peat as fuel in electric stations. Southern Bavaria, for instance, has vast fields which would serve to run electric plants of large size and this would give a great reserve of power. The peat bogs lie mainly in the region of the Danube, and are estimated to cover an area of 500 square miles. Supposing the peat layer to be only three feet in thickness and the cubic foot of peat to afford but three pounds of fuel, this will mean a supply of fifty million tons. The fuel can be burned under boilers or it can be used in special producers to secure a supply of gas for industrial purposes.

Lizard in Stomach

Miss Melrose Pickell of Melrose Highlands, Mass., ate shrimp salad and then was very ill. Ordinary remedies for acute indigestion failed to have any effect and finally by the aid of a stethescope, a physician discovered that there was something alive in the woman's stomach. A head of boiled lettuce was held at Miss Pickell's mouth, and in a moment a very much alive lizard made its escape.

WEARING A WATCH

Several Ways to Carry One But Never in a Pocket

You probably have noticed that the women who wear watches pinned on their breasts are in the minority. Madame Society Matron carries hers in her gold lorgnette. When she is shopping she may wear the watch bracelet. If she is very up-to-date, however, she has a watch set in her card case or vanity bag.

Milady Has Several Choices

Even the young men have decided that watches in the waistcoat pockets, as father used to wear his, are much too slow for them and they have adopted bracelet watches. They wear them, however, in leather bracelets. You can wear your watch any place provided that you make it conspicuously individual. But don't think of wearing it on a chain and tucked away in a watch pocket as grandmother did or even pinned to your breast as mother seemed to think was the right way to carry her timepiece.

Optimism Versus Pessimism

When I am tired I look on life and wearIedly I sigh,
Through cloudy glass I view the game
with pessimistic eye;
On the scales 'gainst Life I weigh the exacting Price and smile,
For the count proclaims the effort not really worth the while.
With a retrospective eye, the hard,
traveled road I see,
The road untraveled, mirror-like, on-stretching endlessly.
With clanking chains, from out the Past come ghosts of yesterday,
In sorry robes of deepest black, with features grave and grey.
The future, dim and shadowy, has sky
that holds no sun;
Fate grapples with Hope's vision bright, and strangles one by one.

When I, refreshed, take up the glass
I view the world anew
With optimistic eye, I see through glass of rosy hue
The world's all right, the game's all right, when played in the right way.
No horrid ghosts take hold of me, no haunt of yesterday.
The future's full of Faith and Hope,
and in the sky a sun
Keeps on forever shining until the day is done.
Should shadows lurk and lie concealed with which I have to strive,
God gave To-day, a bright To-day;
I'm glad to be alive.
Optimist or Pessimist, this my philosophy:
It all depends on circumstance just which way you see.

Paint From Rocks

Millions of dollars are expected to be added to the wealth of Wisconsin as the result of experiments carried out in the mining laboratory of the University of Wisconsin on the merits of Wisconsin paint materials. Immense quantities of rock containing these materials have for centuries been lying idle in the southwestern part of Wisconsin.

A university professor produced from the same ore paint of every hue and color, from mahogany to colonial oak. All proved fast colors and every color showed a good body and lustre. The different colors were produced by a difference in the length of the roasting period.

THE BATH BEAUTIFUL

Anita Morris Points the Way to Cleanliness and Beauty

Centuries ago the Grecian and Roman women were renowned for their loveliness of form and face. Yet they had not one-sixteenth the resources in cosmetic art of the woman of today.

Instead of relying upon balms and creams and powders for the perfecting of their beauty, they revelled in baths! They knew that the woman who would possess a wild rose complexion and all the other attributes of beauty must keep the body exquisitely clean. Consequently they bathed daily in warm fragrant waters.

What was essential then is twice as essential now, when the air is filled with soot and grime. It is a well established fact that a woman cannot be really beautiful unless she bathes thoroughly once every 24 hours. The bath should be taken at night, just before milady is ready to turn into bed. This quiets the nerves and ensures repose. Another good reason for the night bath is that when the pores are cleansed and open, they more readily absorb nourishing skin creams. Follow up the hot bath with a face, hand, arm and shoulder massage with some pure emollient. It is in this way that wrinkled skins are kept at bay.

After filling your bath tub three-quarters full with nice, hot water, it should be softened by throwing in two tablespoonfuls of the following delightful lotion:

Four ounces of alcohol.
One ounce of ammonia.
One dram oil of lavender.

The lotion will make the bath water delightfully fragrant. Lather the body with pure soap; then seize upon a bath brush and ply it with vigor. Be sure to give your nose and chin particular attention, as there is where blackheads love to congregate. The neck also calls for more than perfunctory attention. When you have scrubbed until you are as clean as a human being can be rinse off the snowy lather with plenty of tepid water.

An enthusiastic rub down with smooth and rough towels now follows, the rough towels being used for the body, while the smooth towels are applied to the delicate skin of the face and neck. Smooth and rub until not a drop of moisture remains.

Take an atomizer filled with jasmine toilet water and spray liberally over the shoulders, neck and hair.

The alcohol bath is the thing for the woman who occasionally feels "too tired to talk." If she will rub an alcohol-soaked palm briskly hither and thither over her body for a few minutes the next time she feels "run-down," she will find that her clouds have suddenly acquired a silver lining.

Incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act.
NO PERSONAL LIABILITY

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL - $500,000,

Consisting of

$200.000. 7 Per Cent Preferred at $10.00 Per Share, with Bonus of 25 per cent Common. $300.000 Common at $10.00 per share

DIRECTORS:

J. S. DOUGLAS, Merchant, Winnipeg.
W. F. TALLMAN, Street Commissioner, Winnipeg.
A. B. WOOLDRIDGE, Gentleman, Winnipeg.
D. W. McKERCHAR, Barrister, Winnipeg.
V. A. TALBOT, Real Estate Broker, Winnipeg.

The above Company has purchased from the Excelsior Coal and Brick Co., Ltd., their whole plant as a going concern, the purchase price to be taken in shares of the new Company, and it is the intention of the Directors to equip the plant to make it one of the largest in the West.

The plant is situated in that rich tract of mineral producing country surrounding Estevan, and is near the town. It comprises 640 acres of the best clay and coal to be found anywhere.

The shaft of the coal mine has been sunk to a depth of seventy feet to reach a seam of the best lignite coal, and there are enough entries and passages to enable an output, at slight expense, of 200 tons of coal per day. Other mines in the district are producing less and making considerable profit. A conservative estimate of the profit on each ton is $1.00, but from Government borings near the property it has been shown that there is a seam of coal 650 feet from the surface which is similar to the Lethbridge coal, and which could be sold f.o.b. the mine for at least $5.00 per ton, netting the Company $3.50 per ton. It is to reach this seam and further equip the brick plant that the issue of stock has been made.

There is a constant and ever-increasing demand for brick. At the present moment the price for common brick all over the West is from $12.50—$13.00 per thousand. The clay on our property is of the finest, and makes a brick second to none. We can make bricks for about $4.00 per thousand, so that the profit on the product is considerable. It is the intention of the Company to increase the present brick plant to allow of an output of from 75,000—100,000 common bricks per day, and at least 25,000 pressed bricks, which retail at $25.00 per thousand and cost about $7.00 to produce.

Under the coal there is a strata of fireclay, which is extremely scarce in Canada, and commands a high price. It is intended to instal a machine for the making of fire brick, which is being almost entirely brought from the United States and Scotland; also to manufacture sewer pipes and hollow tiles. Firebrick and hollow tiles command the high price of $40.00 per thousand, and we can make them for less than $8.00.

Coal and brick run in conjunction is probably the finest profit-making combination known. It has been proven over and over again that with competent management such a proposition is a success from the first.

The Directors have insured the success of the new Company by engaging the services of one of the most expert brick men in the West, who will supervise the laying out and working of the new plant.

It is with unbounded faith in the future of this western country that the Directors have decided on offering to the public a share in its development and wealth. The man who invests in this proposition makes a two-fold investment. He invests and aids in the development of his country, and at the same time puts his capital to profitable use.

SAVED BY FISH LINE

Little Boy Was Rescued by His Sisters in a Miraculous Manner

A remarkable case of life-saving is reported from Woodstock, Ontario. The child saved was Albert Hawkins aged eight years. He had been playing on the banks of the River Thames in company with his sisters, Bertha aged fourteen, and Edna, aged twelve when he fell in, where the water was about fifteen feet deep. Bertha, standing on a bridge, saw this, and plunged after him. She was unable to swim but managed to paddle to the shore leaving the little boy, whom she could not aid. The younger sister then seized a fishing-pole, which they had been using, and in a hopeless effort to save the child, cast the line at him. Providence was kind, and the hook caught in his clothing, thus allowing the girls to drag him to shore, although he was almost past rescue.

Buys at Edmonton

George Pearson, of Glasgow, Scotland, brother of Lord Cowdray, head of the famous Pearson Contracting company, completed a real estate purchase in Edmonton which will ultimately bring about $1,000,000 of new English capital into that city.

The immediate purchase price is a little under $500,000, the estimate of the ultimate investment in Edmonton of $1,000,000 being based on the intention of Mr. Pearson to erect a number of modern business buildings on his newly acquired holding.

A CANADIAN WONDER

Tunnel Beneath St. Clair River Represents Huge Engineering Undertaking

Comparatively little is known by Canadians of the St. Clair tunnel beneath the river of that name which connects Sarnia and Port Huron, and yet this is one of the notable engineering features of modern railroading. It would at first sight appear almost an impossibility for a railway train to cross a rather wide stream by any other means than a bridge. Where a bridge is out of the question a railway ferry is the usual alternative. This is accompanied by more than one drawback. The stream may be choked with ice either floating or solid and there is always the risk of stormy weather. Beyond this the shunting ferry consumes no little valuable time. The necessity of a better method compelled the construction of the St. Clair tunnel, which is in some respects the most remarkable in the world.

The length of the tunnel proper is 6,025 feet and of the open portals or approaches, 5,603 feet, making up more than two miles in all—one of the longest sub-marine tunnels in the world. It is a continuous iron tube, 19 feet, 10 inches in diameter, put together in sections as the work of boring proceeded and firmly bolted together, the total weight of the iron being 56,000,000 pounds. The work was commenced in September, 1888; the tunnel was opened for freight traffic in October, 1891, and passenger trains began running through it in December of the same year.

The work was begun at both sides and carried on until the two sections met in mid-river, and with such accuracy that they were in perfect line. The borings were made by means of cylindrical rams, and as fast as the clay was cut away a section of the iron wall of the tunnel was bolted to its fellow section. The rails of the track rest upon cross ties only six inches apart, laid on stringers, which in turn rest on a bed of brick and cement that fills the bottom of the tube.

ICELESS REFRIGERATOR

Chest Has Filling of Salt Between its Two Shelves

A food preserving chest that in effect is an iceless refrigerator has been invented. The whole secret lies in a filling of salt which keeps the temperature of the interior regular. This chest comprises an outer shell of wood and an inner shell of some open mesh material and spaced apart from the outer shell, providing plenty of room for the salt filling. The surface of the inner shell is corrugated so that its area is increased and the action of the salt filling facilitated. Food kept in such a chest is not affected by the warm temperature of the room in which the chest is. That salt is a great agent for the protection of cold bodies from the heat is best exemplified to the general mind by the example of the manner in which the ice surrounding ice cream is salted.

UMBRELLA SUPPORT

Buckles Around Breast and Holds Umbrella Without Hands

Primarily designed for letter-carriers, the umbrella support patented by a Maryland man is likely to make other friends when it becomes well known. This support buckles around the chest, just under the armpits, and on a plate in the centre, in front, are two grips that form a groove to engage the shank of the umbrella, which should have a hook in it if it is not a curved handle in the first place, catches under a strap that is worn around the waist. In this way the rain protector is held quite as firmly as by hand and leaves the hands free for other duties.

A MOTHER'S PRAYER

Utterance of Supplication Learned at Parent's Knee Brings Prosperity and Happiness.

By GEORGE ELMER COBB.

It was merely a business coincidence that Robert A. Jones, lawyer, had offices in the same skyscraper where Robert B. Jones, also lawyer, had an office. The comparison, however, was grotesque. "Judge" Jones occupied a suite on the second floor, about as elaborate as the upholsterer's art could make it. "Bill" Jones, as his friends familiarly called him, had a little ten-by-twelve room at the top story. It contained a worn rug, a small desk, two chairs, and a bookcase holding only the most necessary law books required in the profession.

At these, his sole possessions, Bob was staring gloomily. It was the darkest hour in his life, and the late afternoon shadows formed a fitting frame for his environment. The agent for the building surveyed Bob rather pityingly.

"Sorry, Mr. Jones," he said, "but it's the rule. There's two months' rent overdue. I'll just have the stuff here stored with good care. Soon as you get on your feet again you can pay up and get it back."

"No," said Bob definitely, "sell it. I'm through."

"Don't say that," spoke the agent. "And look here, if it's right down to bread and butter, why, I'm your friend," and the speaker jingled some silver in his pocket significantly.

"Thank you," said Bob in a subdued tone, "but you've been too indulgent already."

"I'll be on hand when you call on me," declared the agent cheerily. "Don't give up the ship—always darkest before the dawn, you know."

Bob leaned against the desk. He was, indeed, "through." He had made a brave fight—no clients, no money, and this was the end. He brushed his hand across his eyes as a flashing picture of the old farm home, father, mother, dead now, filled his mind. Then he put on his hat and opened a drawer in the desk.

He Faced a Dainty, Lissome Young Girl.

A pencil, a memorandum book, two postage stamps, a meal ticket with all the numbers punched out save two—with a rather bitter smile Bob pocketed the lot. He pulled open a second drawer. As if a devil had stung him, his hand shot out eagerly at the little silver-mounted weapon it contained.

"The quick way!" he said hoarsely. There was a click. Then with a shudder he flung the weapon back into the drawer, crashed it shut, and his face fell across his arms. Some power drove his lips to the low sobbing utterance of a prayer, learned at his mother's knee.

"Is this Mr. Jones?" asked a timid, almost frightened voice.

Bob had heard some sound at the door, but had supposed it was the agent going out. In a startled way he faced a dainty, lissome young girl, so oddly out of place in her bewitching grace and prettiness that he almost fancied it a delusion. He just nodded.

"I—that is—" the girl was pale and her hand was trembling as she tendered a large envelope. There was no doubt that she had seen the weapon and heard the prayer. She was confused in delivering a message. "My aunt, Mrs. Cynthia Bell, asked me to give you this. It is—something about—about another lawyer, and—you are to write aunt or see her."

Then she was gone. Bob sank to a chair. His heart had leaped up at such loveliness. But—not for him! He, penniless, a failure! He opened the envelope, supposing it to be some papers in one of the few law cases he had assisted in. Around a file of documents two fifty-dollar bills were folded. Next to them was a note. It read:

"I am the attorney at Blakeville of Mrs. Bell. She will come to you to assist her in getting possession of some important papers, will give you a retainer fee, and if we win the case at this end there will be a contingent fee for you."

"Why," exclaimed Bob, glancing at the envelope, "this is for the Jones downstairs. All that money!"

He sat looking at these crisp bank notes hungrily. For a moment there was a vivid picture of a fine cafe, snowy linen, glittering cut glass, the well served meal, and then—

"The Jones downstairs is away in Europe," mused Bob, "but this is his business, not mine. Ah! Here is an address," and Bob placed the envelope in his pocket and went down to the street.

An hour later Bob was ushered into a suite of rooms in an apartment house three miles away. An old lady and a young one arose to greet him.

"Mr. Jones—you are prompt," said the elder lady, holding his card in her hand. The younger one, his office visitor, looked at him with interest, but strangely.

"Mr. Jones, yes," said Bob with a forced smile, "but not the Mr. Jones for whom these documents were intended." And then Bob told of the other Jones, of his absence, and handed the lady the envelope.

"Aunty," almost whispered the young lady, "may I speak to you for a moment?"

Bob sat fidgetting in his seat. It was the young lady who finally returned, alone. She brought back the packet.

"Mr. Jones," she said, her voice trembling slightly, "I am Marion Bell, the niece of the lady you have just seen. I have spoken to my aunt, and my mistake may not be a mistake after all. We must have a lawyer at once; the other Mr. Jones is away, and—will you take the case?"

"You will trust me, a stranger—" began Bob, choking up.

"Yes," she replied, "because—because I know you need a client, and because that dreadful temptation, your mother's prayer, have told me to be—be your friend. Have I said too much?"

It was a simple case. A miserly old fellow in the city had some papers of the greatest importance in a lawsuit involving the estate of Miss Bell. He might refuse to give them up. He might demand a prohibitory price for their return.

Here again the star of hope and fortune arose for Bob. The old fellow happened to be a client of a friend of Bob, a struggling young lawyer like himself. One week later, at no expense whatever, Bob brought the coveted documents to Mrs. Bell.

In the meantime, through the Bells, he was introduced to some influential people. Two new clients came to him, and things began to look up for loyal, patient Bob.

The day he got back into his old office he called on Marion. He told her the whole story of that dismal afternoon when they had first met.

"And, oh! how sorry I felt for you," confessed Marion, "for I guessed that you were in deep trouble. That dreadful moment when—but that will always be our secret. The sweet mother's prayer drove all the fear and temptation away."

"And you appeared, an angel on the threshold," said Bob. "Yes, that will be our secret, but there is another one. If I only dared to tell it—"

Marion swayed nearer to him. Her eyes told him he might speak, her lips invited the lover's kiss, and Bob knew that the full glorious dawn had come at last!

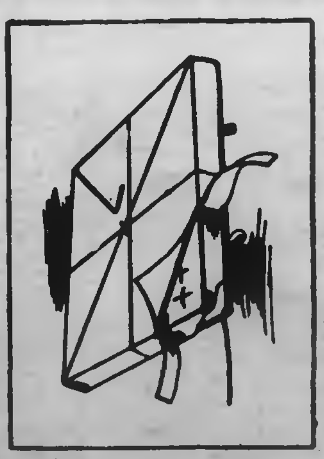
NEW LIFE PRESERVER

Instead of Ring it is Made in the Shape of a Raft

A Maryland man has devised a new form of life preserver. Instead of being made in the shape of a ring, to be worn around the body under the arms, this one is square in shape and forms a little raft for the imperiled user to rest upon. The body of the life preserver is of cork-filled canvas, as is customary, but around the entire bottom is a thin iron rod that acts as a bracing frame and keeps it rigid. Otherwise it would promptly buckle up and precipitate the occupant into the water. The whole contrivance is enclosed in an envelope of some thin waterproof material. There are loops along the frame so that a rope may be attached to the block in cases where it is thrown out to a person and then hauled in. Owing to its flat, square shape a pile of these preservers take up little room.



FRAME HOLDS IT RIGID.

Kaiser's Shooting Record

The chief sporting magazine of Germany has been examining the facts and figures that have been allowed to reach the public concerning the thousand-and-one shots in which the German Emperor has taken part in the forty years that he has held a gun. In the course of this time the Emperor has shot 2,094 red deer; 1,872 fallow deer; 3,442 wild boar; 965 roebuck, 17,968 hares, 2,686 rabbits, 121 chamois, reindeer, 2 moose, one, 6 badgers, an otter, 106 cock, 24 heathcock, 5 "bronze" turkeys, 2 guineafowl, 36,578 pheasants, 867 partridges, 95 grouse, 5 snipe, 2 woodcock, 37 wild duck, 826 heron and cormorant, a whale, and 528 under the head of various—a total of 70,345 head.

Why is it that the champions of the bantamweight and featherweight classes, with possibly a few exceptions, never draw anywhere near the money that the stars in other classes do? The little fellows can always be relied upon to put up the fastest kind of battles, but for some reason the average fight fan likes to see the big fellows in action, or if not the heavyweights then the lightweights.

DIABETES CURED —THE PROOF

We have proof of cases of Diabetes that have been cured by SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES when the patient had been a sufferer from the disease for fifteen (15) years. This remedy is particularly efficacious in cases in which open wounds, add to the sufferings of the patient. It has cured the most stubborn cases after all the usual remedies and diets have signally failed.

We have scores of confidential letters from grateful patients who have found relief in Sanol's Anti-Diabetes. These letters do not come from people in distant parts, but from residents of western cities and towns. They are convincing.

—Sanol's Anti-Diabetes is no common remedy—it is different from the usual—it is a specific and scientific remedy, prepared for the relief and cure of one disease and one only.

A well-known Government official of British Columbia (whose name will be given in confidence) writes us that on June 12th he commenced the use of SANOL'S ANTI-DIABETES, and that on June the 19th his urine was free of sugar. To prove that wonderful statement he sent us the certificates of the chemist's analysis. "The result," he says, "I regard as highly gratifying."

Belief Growing That Man Should be Ambidextrous

Why is it that we neglect to use the left hand so much?

Among English-speaking people 97 out of every 100 are right-handed when they reach reach maturity. Out of every 100 such persons 17 are born right-handed, three are born left-handed and the remaining 80 are born without preference as to either hand. Eighty are influenced to become strongly right-handed during early childhood.

No great asset in the world is so neglected as the average left hand. Formerly all the world was ambidextrous. Primitive man had no preference which hand he used. And in various parts of the world efforts are now being made to revive the use of the left hand.

Japan has for many years been teaching two-handedness to the men of its army and in its Public schools. The German Government is following Japan's example. Sir Robert Baden Powell, founder of the Boy Scouts does not consider a man a well-trained soldier unless he can mount equally well on either side of his horse, use the sword, revolver and lance equally well with both hands.

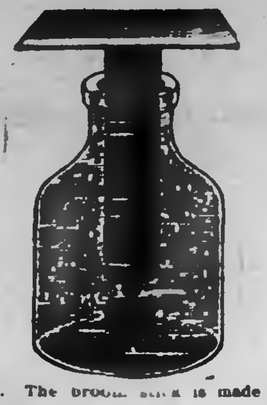
HERE IS ANOTHER USE FOR THE MILK BOTTLE

How It May be Made to Tell the the Weight of Your Letter

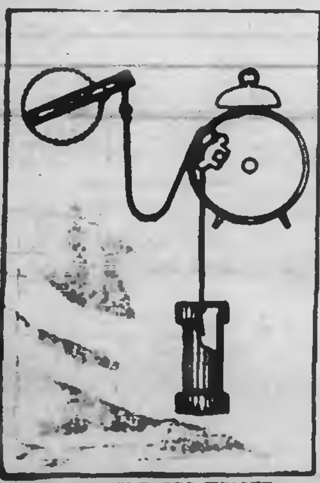
It is a great bore to have a letter to mail and not know how many stamps will be required for it. There are few people who have a postal scales. It is a great convenience and it is much cheaper to make one than buy it. They are easily made, too. All that is necessary is a milk bottle or other wide mouthed bottle, a piece of broom stick, a lead weight and a flat piece of tin. The broom stick is made of convenient size to fit into the bottle and not go quite to the bottom. The structure is made as shown in the sketch, with the weight attached to the bottom of the stick. The bottle is filled with water. With the stick fixed in the bottle as shown, a set of known weights are placed on the top and the graduations of the scale marked on the stick as the weights shove it down into the bottle. Care should be taken to see that the weight is just heavy enough to hold the stick about half way down the bottle, so that plenty of room is given for the weighing of the scales with the letters. If some of the water escapes by evaporation, more should be added to keep the stick at a uniform level.



CLOCK OPERATES VALVES

Time Mechanism Opens Them and Operates Switches, Etc.

A time mechanism for the operation of valves, switches and the like has been invented. A notched wheel is attached to the object to be operated and a lever is pivoted to this wheel. The lever is in two parts, slidably connected so that the length may be varied as required. A cord attached to the free end of the lever has a weight at its other end. This cord is lightly wound around the key of an alarm clock and suspends the weight on the latter. When the alarm goes off the key revolves and throws off the cord, which allows the weight to drop and exert a downward pull on the lever. This in turn operates the mechanism which opens the valve, or switch, or whatever is to be opened. The same principle can be applied to a furnace door.



CLOCK RELEASES WEIGHT.

Smallest Beast of Prey.

The smallest carnivorous animal in the world is an American weasel which is numerous in northwest Canada and Alaska and is occasionally seen about the Great Lakes. Although the animal turns white in the north in winter, it does not show the black-tipped tail which characterizes an ermine pelt, and so it is not sought by trappers and fur traders. This fact, with its small size and secretive life, has made its habits very little known. It feeds on insects, which it finds alive in summer and in winter digs out of rotten logs; upon small birds, etc., but lives mainly upon mice. These it can follow into their narrowest holes and runways, for it is scarcely larger than a field mouse itself; or, striking the trail of one, it will trace all its wanderings and as soon as it catches sight of its prey it will spring after it with amazing and fatal rapidity.—Harper's Weekly.

TWO OLD TOWERS A LINK WITH PAST

From Them the Early Settlers of Montreal Defended Their Community Against Indians

In front of the Montreal College, on Sherbrooke Street, Montreal, there still stand two towers from which the original band of colonists defended themselves against the Indians in the year 1600, or thereabouts. There were originally four towers, but two are gone.

When the Sulpicians came out from Paris, having either received the island as a gift or bought it from the Company of One Hundred, which has always been their claim, they occupied the house of Maisonneuve, which stood on what is now St. Paul street.

It is said that the Sulpicians, once they got into possession, made it so hot for Maisonneuve that the poor man was glad to leave. Any way, the Sulpicians, after some years of occupancy, moved to the base of the mountain, on what is now Sherbrooke street, building a modest place in which to live and study and teach.

In front of the building four large towers were built for defensive purposes. Hochelaga, the Indian town, was not far away. In fact, it occupied what is now the McGill University campus. The primary object of the Sulpicians was to teach; but they soon found that their immediate business must be to fight. They built the forts as they built all their establishments—to last. They mounted cannon in the loop holes—such rude ornaments as they possessed of this denomination; and in repeated attacks, defended themselves with success.

The towers have walls two feet thick. There is a sort of gallery above where the defenders slept after the arduous duty of fighting all day. During the intermission of fighting the Sulpicians obtained a number of Indian children and held school for them in the forts. The names of the pupils are given in a framed record, which also shows how many Indians were converted to Christianity, and how one of the chiefs, together with a squaw, are buried beneath the forts, in which they died through disease.

In building the present college in [illegible], two of the towers which were in the way, were taken down; but the remaining forts are an object of curiosity to the antiquarian, as recording the early history of the colony in a heroic account.

SIMPLE REMEDIES

COUGH—For a cough which accompanies the ordinary cold make a pint of strong sage tea; add one-half teaspoonful of alum, two tablespoonfuls of honey, one tablespoonful of gum arabic. Or—Make a pint of strong flaxseed tea. Squeeze in the juice of two lemons, add a quarter of a pound of lump sugar.

FAINTING—There is rarely ever a doctor at hand when a person faints. Simple remedies will usually bring anyone out of an ordinary faint. Lay the patient down; give plenty of air; allow no crowding; loosen the clothing; rub the hands, sprinkle the head and face and apply hartshorn to the nostrils. When consciousness begins to return raise the head a little or bring the patient to a half-sitting posture and fan. Do not seem excited or speak loudly.

HEMORRHAGE—Send for a physician. In the meantime lay the patient down, apply cold cloths to the chest and administer table salt at short intervals.

INDIGESTION—For a sudden seizure of indigestion, with dangerous symptoms, administer a teaspoonful of table salt. Put a mustard plaster on the stomach, hot brick to the feet and give a gentle cathartic.

FOR A FIT—Extend the patient with the head elevated. Give plenty of air. Apply ice or cold water to the head and heat to the feet. Apply ammonia, rub the feet and hands.

SEVERE VOMITING—After the stomach seems to have been relieved of any irritating substance put a bottle of hot water to the feet of the patient. Apply to the stomach cloths that have been wrung out of hot vinegar and mustard. Keep the patient in bed with the head comfortably elevated. Apply cloth wet in cold water to the forehead and keep a handkerchief, wet in bay rum, cologne or camphor, near the face. Have the air pure and the room partially darkened.

CROOK'S QUEER EXCUSE

Canadian Claimed Dishonesty Due to Injuries to His Head.

A most interesting case of criminal physiology in police annals was presented by Phillip Van Tine, who was arrested at Milwaukee, charged with having raised a cheque from $7 to $70. Van Tine who is 35 years old, and claimed to be a native of Toronto, admitted the act, but insisted that he was morally irresponsible.

In his mental make-up, he claimed, there is a criminal streak, and he is so constituted mentally that at times he is unable to resist the temptation to steal. He asked that an operation be performed upon his brain to make an honest man of him. He claimed that at the age of 10 his head was injured in a runaway accident, and since then he had an uncontrollable desire to steal. The judge promised to consider his request.

CLEAN FOOD CLUBS

They Save Doctor Bills and Everyone is Eligible

Every woman in charge of a home should be the president of a family "clean-food" club. Al the members of the family might easily become members of the club, aiding her in any way she suggests or they think wise. The purpose of the clean-food club is to keep tab on the stores, dairies and other produce places from which the table is supplied.

The home keeper should know that the milk being fed to her children and other members of her household comes from a dairy where sanitation is properly considered. Perhaps she will have to enlist the services of her son or her husband or even the board of health to carry this out. Why not? It's worth while.

The home keeper should know that eggs are good; that fruit is fresh; that baker's bread, if used, is handled in a sanitary way.

The home keeper shoud be sure, in the fly season—which includes a good share of the year—that vegetables and fruit are covered or properly protected by a strong draught of air.

Numbers of diseases can be traced back, indirectly at least, to a disorder of the stomach or other organs through which food passes. If the home keeper watched her table more closely and taught her children the wisdom of eating clean wholesome food more, there would be less need of the medicine chest and the hurry call to the physician.

A HEAVY DRINK BILL

Lawyer Says Edmonton Consumes More Than Its Share of Liquor

Calculating the expenditure on liquors at $10 per head for every person in the Dominion, Alex. Stuart, K.C., in an address at Edmonton, said that in a town of the population of Edmonton it meant that if drink were abolished there would be an annual expenditure of $500,000 available for schools, hospitals and civic improvements. As a matter of fact the expenditure per head on intoxicating liquors in the Dominion was larger than $10 per head, the total expenditure being annually $81,000,000, whereas the population was only something over seven millions. Further, he was of opinion that in proportion to the population there was no place in Canada where there was so much liquor drunk as in Edmonton.

Big Canal Property

Nearly 200 miles of canals are owned by the Great Western Railway Company.

The Rubber Output

The average annual output of the world in rubber is 90,000 tons, valued at $300,000,000.

UNEXPECTED FORTUNE

Estate Worth Half a Million Goes to Three Sisters

Mrs. Richard Simmons, 54 years of age, who keeps a boarding house at Syracuse, N. Y., expects to come into one-third of an estate of $500,000 left by her sister, Mrs. Claranda Hunt, a former preceptress in a girls' academy in Ontario, who died some time ago, leaving her fortune to Mrs. Simmons and two other sisters.

The other beneficiaries are Sophia, wife of Peter Williams, a Napanee lawyer, and Elizabeth, wife of James Irvine, a farmer of Antwerp, New York State.

It is over two years since Mrs. Hunt died in San Francisco, and the executors of the estate had a long search for Mrs. Simmons. Mrs. Hunt's will provided that the estate should go to her husband and son, but as they predeceased her, a clause naming the three sisters as contingent beneficiaries became operative.

The four sisters were daughters of Philip Frolich, of Antwerp, N.Y., who made his money in the iron industry at that town. The late Mrs. Hunt, her husband and son, were all in the teaching profession, and were at various times connected with several educational institutions in the United States and Canada.

WORLD LANGUAGE OF SIGNS

Sir William Ramsay Has Plan to Use Pictorial Characters Based on Chinese.

To make possible the exchange of ideas among all peoples of the world Sir William Ramsay, the English scientist, has begun to develop a pictorial sign language, based somewhat upon Chinese, which he hopes will eventually spread among all races.

The Chinese character to express "man," for instance, is made with two converging lines that represent simply his legs, looking much like the legs of the crude man that the schoolboy draws.

Sir William's character goes further and adds a vertical straight line above the converging lines to represent the body.

"The first thing that one thinks of," he argues, "is existence expressed in the verb 'to be.'"

So he has selected the arithmetical equality mark to denote existence. All things relating to one's state and condition, he said, can be expressed by these two parallel lines.

For time which stretches away, or action that is constant, he uses a dash. Instantaneous time or action he represents with a dot. Thus a dot placed squarely between and in the middle of two lines of the equality mark denotes the immediate present, or "I am." Similarly the dot, when placed at the left and between the two lines denotes past, or "I was," and when placed to the right indicates the future tense, or "I am to be."

To denote a woman Sir William draws a line closing the diverging ends of the legs of the sign for man. On the theory that "I" is the most important thing in the world to any man, Sir William utilises the straight vertical line that represents the body of his man figure to depict the word.

What He Was After.

It was a very hot day and the fat drummer who wanted the 12:20 train got through the gate at just 12:21. The ensuing handicap was watched with absorbing interest both from the train and the station platform. At its conclusion the breathless and perspiring knight of the road wearily took the back trail and a vacant faced "red cap" came to relieve him of his grip.

"Mister," he inquired, "was you tryin' to ketch that Pennsylvania train?"

"No, my son," replied the patient man. "No; I was merely chasing it out of the yard."—Saturday Evening Post.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

—BY—

CLIVE PHILLIPPS WOLLEY

(AUTHOR OF "GOLD, GOLD IN CARIBOO," ETC.)

Supplied Exclusively in Canada by The British & Colonial Press Service, Limited.

The others held on for one more breathing space, and then the log broke clean away from them, rolling merrily down the hill, whilst three miserable devils writhed in the sage brush in the vain hope of hiding from the white men's withering volley. One wretch ran perhaps for fifty yards with an arm swinging helplessly from his shoulder as he ran, and they saw him wince and stumble as a second bullet touched him.

"Outer to me, Boss," shouted Al, pumping up another cartridge, "bull to you," he added, regretfully, before he could fire again, as his fellow-creature collapsed in a heap and lay still.

Men fighting for their lives have no sentiment, and perhaps Al never had much at any time. The sight of blood had roused all his fighting instincts, and for the moment he was as reckless as he was pitiless.

"Oh shoot, and be blanked!" he cried, as half a dozen bullets hummed past him. "It's our turn now. Pull them other traps, cain't you."

But the other traps were not pulled. Whilst the centre log was betraying its masters, the two outside logs had come to a standstill, and so, in spite of Al's gibes and the bullets with which he made chips of them fly, they remained, great black bars on the prairie, three hundred yards from the cherry patch, whilst the November sun crawled down towards the horizon. Suddenly it dipped into a low lying bar of cloud and the light failed so suddenly that Al noticed it.

"We've got to hurry, Boss," he said sinking into his place by Rolt's side, and shaking a spray of blood off his hand where a bullet had skinned it. "We cain't let them fellows stay there after dark."

"What are we going to do to prevent it? We have lost our horses."

"That's so; but if we stay here we'll be roasted as soon as it's too dark to shoot. They'll fire the bush on us, sure."

"Well, what is your plan?" asked Rolt, wearily. He was a brave man, but the fight against such odds, as he now realised that they had against them, seemed to him hopeless.

Only the boyish spirits of such a dare-devil as the old frontiersman could remain unbroken under such a strain.

"I ain't got no plan," he drawled "at least no plan to speak of, but a Scripture saying seems to me to come in mighty handy—'Do unto others the same as they'd do unto you,' only do it quicker. Now, those Injuns are calculating to rush us as soon as it gets good and dark. We've got to rush them first."

"All right."

"Hold on. 'Tain't time for the next act yet. We've got to play this game according to Hoyle, with all the frills as belongs to it. Fust there's some music from the orchestra, then the light grows kinder dim and the curtain, then the ghost appears. See?"

Rolt did see, and he never saw a half-hour in his long life so trying as that during which he and the other three men crouched, like sprinters, waiting for the start, whilst the silent logs lay motionless in front of them, and one by one the outlines of the prairie grew indistinct, the separate tree tops merged into each other, and night came.

"They might try to get back to the timber," whispered Al, "and come on all together later on. If they do, that'll be our time to rush them. Do you mind the scarlet pine?"

"That big one like a Scotch fir beyond their camp?"

"All by its lone on a bluff. Yes, that's it. We've got to make for that."

"But we should have to go through the whole lot of them to get to it."

"That's so, but it's the only way as they won't expect us, and it's the short cut to supper. Are you scared to try it? Maybe the folk at the ranch want us as bad as I want my tucker."

"You choose your time and I'll follow."

"'Twon't do to bunch up; that's the trouble. We'll have to split like a band of prairie chicken, and I'm scared as you'll lose your way."

Rolt knew that in the darkness this was only too probable, but there were other lives to be considered, more precious to him than his own.

"Do you think I am a kid or a tchee tchako, Al?" he said, angrily.

"All right; I guess you ain't, if it comes to that; but keep your hair on as long as they'll let you. Mine fel's almighty loose, I can tell you," and then silence fell upon them as they waited, whilst the dark came quickly, as it does in northern lands. First the bar of brown cloud turned to fiery crimson, then the crimson died to orange, that faded, and for a space the pines came out hard and clear cut against a pale green sky, and then the light faded and an owl hooted.

"That's the signal. They're going back," whispered Al. "Are you ready?" and his voice had a shake in it. Even he was excited at last.

Before Rolt could reply the old man was on his feet.

"Come on," he cried, and then, as he told them afterwards at the ranch, "I'm blessed if I didn't think I was standing still."

"Though he had grown too heavy for running long distances, Rolt had in his time been a famous university sprinter, and the long strain of waiting had worked upon his nerves, until they were like coiled springs. When the release came he bounded forward as he had done when he was the first string for his alma mater, and passed Al as a motor-car passes a bus.

"To 'em, boys," screamed Al. "Sock it to 'em! Give 'em hell!" and, yelling like a fiend or an old Cree brave, he dashed after his leader.

To their credit, in spite of his pace, Toma and Al were not much farther behind Rolt when he sprang at the log, than the second and third strings are behind the winner in the quarter.

As Rolt reached the log a group of figures rose from the sage brush. They had already wormed their way through it for some fifty yards unseen, but concealment being no longer possible, they rose now and ran.

"Fleet as an Indian," men say who do not know Indians. Those who know them would back Oxford or Harvard, Cambridge or Yale, to beat any Indian who ever drew the breath of the prairies into his lungs. The trouble is that most of the men who take back these stories of Indian prowess don't know anything about first-class athletes; don't know what it means to come to London the wonder of your country and find yourself a very moderate second-class in town; and, moreover, the raconteurs, being for the most part authorities on whiskey, have no personal standard to judge by. They themselves think themselves men. The boys would call them obsolete machines past forty and fit only for wasting good fuel.

But Rolt's muscles had been kept hard by an out-door life, and he was still five years on the right side of forty, so that his feet seemed to devour the distance, and in spite of their efforts the shadowy figures of the Indians grew plainer, until one turned to face the terror panting at his shoulder. He had hardly time to see the fierce white face. The earth itself seemed to rise up and strike him, and he knew no more.

Years after he was known as Billy Brokenjaw. He was more lucky than the big Chilcoten just ahead of him. The hand which struck the senses out of Billy, gripped and clawed at the nape of the next man's neck. For a dozen paces it seemed doubtful whether white rage or red terror would win in that race for life, but the clawing fingers bent at last, and the Indians shock of black hair, being coarse and strong as a horse's mane, the grip of those fingers held, and the two men rolled over together, like fox and hound in the final worry.

There is a particular scent to-day, not unlike the smell of dying sage brush, which makes old man Rolt turn squeamish. When he smells it, he sees the whites of an Indian's eyes, and feels a neck bending back until it snicks.

CHAPTER XXII.

Rolt and Al did not stay to look at their work.

"Come on," the old man insisted, and though the remaining Chilcotens had secured too good a start to be caught up now, the two white men pressed as closely upon their heels as they could. Before the pursuers had covered half the distance the pursued had vanished into the timber, but Al held on steadily, straight into the Indians' lines.

Through the first rank of the pines master and man passed unmolested, running swiftly but silently, until Rolt saw indistinctly a mob of men on his right, uncertain, it seemed, whether to run to him or away from him, until Al called to them in the strange clucking gutterals of their own language.

The meaning of what Al said Rolt could not catch, but he saw the mob disperse, running apparently in the same general direction as himself, and he wondered even then at the marvellously true accent and ready wit which had for the moment deceived the Indians.

For twenty yards the two tore through the impending brush or blundered in the dark amongst logs and windfalls, then they emerged upon the main trail which led to Kholowna's camp. If they had had time to think, the smooth firmness of it would have suggested to them the numbers of an enemy who could wear such a trail in so short a time.

As they ran past what looked in the dark like a brush lean to, a man leapt out upon the path, and Al, who was now leading, repeated his cry. But the man was too near to be deceived, and though Al was past him, the Indian tried boldly to block Rolt's way. To Rolt he was the full back of his boyhood's days. Without decreasing his pace he pretended to swerve, and then, as the man closed on him, turned and ran right at him, tilted the Indian's chin up with the butt of his open hand so that his head was shoved almost off his shoulders, and so passed amongst the great dim pines which stood for goal posts, through a line of smouldering fires, seeing only the tall thin figure of the tireless runner in front.

As they ran a horse whinnied, and Al, checking for a minute, branched off the main trail.

"Holy smoke!" he panted, as Rolt overhauled him. "That's their horse camp. Let's chance it, Boss. It's worth the risk," and he stole swiftly along through the bushes until they opened out into a narrow swamp, not an acre in extent all told.

In it twenty or thirty horses had been picketted, and as luck would have it not a man was in sight.

"Cut the ropes or pull the pegs," gasped Al, and his own jack knife snicked and slashed about the horses, reckless of their heels or of any who might be on the trail.

"Now jump on and git," he added, "I'll finish 'em. Jump, blank it, jump!" he screamed, as the Boss hesitated, and a crashing of brush in the direction of the fires warned him that the minutes of grace had all but expired.

Rolt obeyed him as the last rope was severed, and Al, losing his head at last, cried in his triumph, "Now, catch us, you swine!" as he swung himself on to the back of the last horse and galloped into the bush.

As if in answer to his taunt, a dozen Indians dashed into the opening, and four or five rifles were fired point blank at the retreating figure.

Luckily his horse was not hit, but for a moment the old man swayed and all but toppled from his seat, but though he rode bare-backed, he got his grip again, and in spite of the deadly sickness which took him and the warm trickle from the numbed shoulder, he managed to stick on, whilst the loose horses, frightened by the shooting, thundered past, jostling him as they went, into the darkness in which Rolt had vanished.

For a mile, perhaps, he let his horse gallop, almost lying on its neck to avoid overhanging boughs, maintaining a precarious position by holding on to the horse's mane with his uninjured hand.

Sorely against his will he had to let his rifle go. If his enemies caught him the rifle would be useless now, and he had all that he could do for the one good arm left him.

When at last he came out upon the prairie he reduced his pace to a lope and sat up, muttering as he guided his horse with his knees and tried to hold up his wounded arm with his left hand.

"Winged, blank them, but not bagged yet, nor goin' to be by any measly Chilcoten," but though his words were brave his sleeve was very sodden with a warm sticky fluid which still continued to ooze into it, and Al was growing so dim of sight and dizzy that he would have ridden right into Rolt, had not his horse shied.

Then for the first time since he had grown to man's estate, the old man cut a voluntary, but even then he held on to the halter rope, and managed to murmur:

"All right, Colonel. Don't shoot. I'm comin' down," but he had only a hazy idea that Rolt was blocking the way, his rifle resting across his horse's back, and of what happened for a while after he spoke he knew nothing.

His disgust was immense, and his scorn withering, when he sat up again with a curious bandage tightly around his upper arm, and heard the Boss ask whether he thought he could sit on his horse if it were led for him.

"Sit on? Who, the blank, said I couldn't sit on! I'm only barked a bit. Must have knocked this fool head of mine agen a bough, I reckon, or I shouldn't have fell off." But for all that he couldn't remount without assistance, which he accepted only under protest, and with a perfect string of oaths, such as in ordinary times no man ever heard him use.

But once in the saddle again, he seemed to recover. It is true that he never spoke a word after the first five minutes, which was unlike Al, but he remained on his horse's back whilst the endless miles went by in the dark. Only once Rolt heard him muttering to himself, "Guess I can go on three legs as well as a buck. I never seed a buck as would stop because I tinkered it."

That was the spirit in which he, and for the matter of that, Rolt, too, rode all that night. To the rough riders of our plains, pain or discomfort are not things to be moaned over or made much of. Like the beasts of the field in this, unless a wound is bad enough to stop the working of their machinery, they go on as if unhurt. When they lie down, it is with them, and with their rivals, the Indians, to die, and that, too, they do quietly.

Rolt and Al would willingly have given in. Their bodies cried to them for mercy, for leave to slide out of the saddle into the sweet-smelling sage brush and lie still, but though both were utterly spent, though neither had tasted food for twenty-four hours, and one was badly wounded, the thought of the lonely ranch with the two women in it was always before their eyes, and kept them plodding on, trying hard to abstract their minds from the painful present, which had to be lived through. The night waxed and waned for them, riding in this fashion, whilst the unseen troop of Indian horses pattered behind them, now stopping to graze, now galloping after them in alarm lest they should lose sight of their mates.

With the first streak of dawn they debouched upon the edge of the home pasture, powdered by a thin fall of snow.

"Rufus, and Old Regent," muttered Rolt, as he paused for a moment by two snow-sprinkled carcases. "What accursed butchery!"

"There's more of the same kind," replied Al feebly, pointing to other similar mounds. "They've rounded up and killed all the stock they could come near; but thank God for that!" and he held his one hand out towards the ranch house which came in sight as he spoke.

It still stood untouched as far as they could see, nor was there an Indian in sight in all the country which surrounded it.

Rolt made an inarticulate sound. His lips seemed for the moment unable to move, and then, pointing to the house, he managed to say, "Can you—"

"Of course I can, blank it!" replied the old man, with a sudden flash of energy. "You'd have ridden on an hour ago if you hadn't been such an unmitigated idiot!" but as the Boss spurred his horse over the rise and down the long meadow which led to all he loved, Al suddenly collapsed, and murmuring: "Your white, pretty blanked white, Rolt," slid easily out of his saddle, rolled over, and lay still, whilst his horse, after one snort of surprise, began to feed slowly away from his prostrate form.

Al had drawn upon his endurance to the very last ounce, and when, a quarter of an hour later, Jim Combe came to bring him in, he found the old man still unconscious where he had fallen.

CHAPTER XXIII.

In the absence of Rolt, Jim Combe took command of the party at the ranch, and military law was declared: that is to say, Jim insisted upon looking on the house as in a state of siege, though, as Anstruther protested, there was not an Indian in sight nor, he averred, ever likely to be again.

The men were divided into watches, so that there was not an hour of the day or night when some of them were not on guard, whilst no work was undertaken which could lead the defenders to any distance from their base.

On the first day after the departure of the posse, shots were heard over the hog's back, and Jim, who made a reconnaissance in person, reported that a band of Chilcotens was killing cattle, but though the loss inflicted would be serious, he would not listen to Anstruther's suggestion that an attempt should be made to drive off the marauders.

He was determined that the story of the burning stacks should not be repeated. It was better to lose anything than to expose the women to the danger of a rush upon the house.

On the second day there was not even the sound of a shot to keep up the vigilance of the defenders, and the scouting party sent out by Jim reported all clear to the sky line.

"Our people have driven the Indians clear out of the country," asserted Anstruther. "Arson at night is the limit of their daring. It is not likely that such miserable devils would make a stand against armed white men."

But Jim thought otherwise, and decreed the destruction of certain barns and outhouses beyond the corrals, as affording dangerous cover for an attacking force.

They are valuable buildings in a country where lumber is not as plentiful as it is at the coast, and Mrs. Rolt watched the destruction of them with a sore heart.

ORIENTAL FANATICS

A Peculiar Man Who Was Venerated as a Saint

In many parts of the Orient a lunatic has always been reverenced as one who is much nearer God than any sane person. During the Crimean war a Mohammedan religionist from Bagdad joined the Turkish army as a ghazi, or warrior for religion. He was a man of rare mental gifts and immense learning. Yet bare-headed and bare-footed, with scanty clothing, his sword girded about his lean loins, this fanatic marched through snow and ice at the head of his division, or led the way into the thickest of the fights. Five times a day, when he said his prayers, he ungirt his sword. But save then, either by day or night, sleeping or waking, he never went unarmed. He was a scholar, thoroughly versed in Arabic and Persian literature. Even in his own house, though speaking to wife, children and friends, no other word but "Ali" ever passed his lips. If he wanted food or drink, if he begged or bought, his wants were expressed by "Ali." He would race up and down the streets of the city for a day, shrieking at the top of his voice, "Ali! Ali!" Everyone venerated this fanatic as a saint. The richest man in the city presented him with a magnificent horse, saddle and bridle. Vaulting into the saddle, as soon as he had received the gift, he galloped through the town shouting, "Ali! Ali!" Riding into the noisy bazaar, he cried "Ali" with such strength of voice as to be heard clearly above the frightful din of the shouting buyers and pounding mechanics.

ROMANTIC DAYS PAST

Wrong Ideas Engendered in Minds of Youthful Would-be Canadians

Sir Robert Baden-Powell inspected a Boy Republic at Wadhurst, in Sussex, where a lot of Boy Scouts are studying farming with a view to coming to Canada. On the occasion of his visit the boys elected a mayor, gave an exhibition of scouting work, and a Wild West performance.

It is to be feared that a dime novel idea of Canada is being encouraged in these young fellows, and that some disappointments are in store for them.

There is not much scouting to be done out here nowadays by young fellows on the farms. Beyond the occasional necessity for tracing a stray steer along a side line or Sherlock Holmesing along a fence to find a hole that a pig got through, there is not much doing in that line, and usually the farmer does it himself and leaves the youthful hired man to milk cows or chop feed.

All these romantic ideas and circus stunts may help in inducing boys to come to Canada, but it cannot be a good thing for Canada to land here a lot of young fellows who are going to be disappointed in every experience they encounter. There are fine openings in Canada for young men. But this is no fairyland, no land of romance. It is a country where everybody works as people work scarcely anywhere else in the world.—Toronto Star.

KING OF FLAG STAFFS

Victoria, B. C., Has Douglas Fir Over Two Hundred Feet in Height

What is pronounced to be the biggest stick of squared timber in the world was secured by the British Columbia Government for a flag staff in front of the courthouse at Victoria. This king of flag poles is 204 feet high, and its diameter is about two feet ten inches at the base tapering to about one foot at the top.

The "stick" had to be taken in a direct haul from the water to the Court House, as its great length made turnings out of the question. It was taken by the logging railroad to Stillwater Bay and floated in a boom to Vancouver.

"The Douglas fir from which the timber was cut scaled 7,500 feet," said Mr. McKay, provincial timber inspector. "I presume it is the largest single piece wooden staff in the British Empire, or in any Empire, Kingdom or Republic for the matter of that."

TRAMPING AROUND WORLD

"Flying Dutchman" Had Adventures in Many Lands

Arrested as a spy in two lands, attacked by brigands in another, thrown into icy northern waters from a canoe —these are a few of the adventures of Lieut. Nordwall, the "Flying Dutchman," who spent a few days resting in Montreal preparatory to the next lap of his walk around the world.

He walked forty thousand miles through all the countries of Europe, through the western United States, through Alaska, and across the continent to Montreal. Thence his route lay to Boston and across the Atlantic to his home in Holland.

The big Dutchman's experiences would fill a book. He was set upon by bandits in Spain, and beaten nearly to death, and all his clothing taken from him. He was upset from a canoe in the Yukon river and had to swim to shore for his life, through swift rapids. Then his guide left him, and, not knowing the dangers of the river, he ran all the rapids, including the Five Fingers, one of the worst on the Yukon. He was told it was a miracle he got through it.

He was arrested on all sorts of charges from blocking the streets (because of the crowds who followed him) to assaulting street car conductors.

He was arrested in Smyrna, suspected with being a spy. He had been travelling in Dutch costume, wooden shoes, etc., through Europe.

"In England and France," he said, "they had me arrested for obstructing the sidewalk. In Turkey, however, they thought it was a disguise, and arrested me for a spy.

Lieut. Nordwall is about five feet nine inches in height, tanned a rich brown by his five years of life in the open air. He tramped not to win a wager, not to break records, but merely for the education of "walking around the world." He gave lectures to pay his expenses.

Abalone Meat in Demand.

Dried and smoked abalone meat, most of which is cured in southern California fishing ports, is purchased by Oriental importers at fancy prices. Occasionally it sells for $300 a ton. In some instances divers are employed to procure the mollusks, and it is not uncommon for an experienced man to bring to the surface two tons of meat and shells in a day.

Headache Over the Eyes? Look for Nasal Catarrh

Catarrh Never Stops in One Place—It Spreads Rapidly—Often Ruins Health Completely.

In this changeable climate it is the little colds that drift into Catarrh. Unless the inflammation is checked it passes rapidly from the throat or nose to the bronchial tubes and then to the lungs. You can't make new lungs any more than you can make new fingers or toes, but you can cure Catarrh.

The surest cure consists of breathing in the healing balsamic essences of CATARRHOZONE, which is simply a medicated vapor so full of rich curative properties that every trace of Catarrh vanishes before it.

"The soothing piney vapor of Catarrhozone is the most powerful medicine I ever used," writes Mrs. Edmond J. Christime, of Saskatoon. "Every breath drawn through the Inhaler sends a grateful feeling through the air passages of the nose and throat. Catarrhozone cured me of frightful headaches over the eyes, relieved me of a stuffy feeling in the nose, and an irritable hacking cough that had been the bane of my life for a year. My general health is greatly improved, my appetite and digestion are considerably better than before. Catarrhozone has been the means of giving me such health as I always desired, but never possessed."

Even though catarrh has a firm hold on you, and affects your throat, nose or ears, you can thoroughly cure it with Catarrhozone. Large size, guaranteed, costs $1.00; smaller size 50c.; sample size 25c. All storekeepers and druggists, or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada

A Milk Vendor Case

Mr. Shirter was charged by Sanitary Inspector with selling milk without having a license. It seems that the other milkmen had complained. He only sold his surplus milk to those who came to his place for it. The case was brought, not to get a fine, but a ruling. Those who sell milk, in any way will be required to take out a license, which only costs $1 a year.

An Important Police Ruling

At yesterday's police court, Mr. W. A. Oke was charged with exposing fruit on the public street. Mr. W. H. Moore, for Mr. Oke asked for an enlargement. The magistrate said "I won't stand this quibbling over absolute facts. Everybody knows that all the fruit dealers leave their fruit on the street line to be covered by millions of microbes. I shall take the evidence." Mr. E. H. D. Hall said, for the prosecution that the fruit dealers all have open windows so that dust can blow in. A large number of cases were quoted by Mr. Hall descriptive of what constitutes "a public place" and a "street." The case was enlarged until Friday.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

KEEP BABY AT HOME

Babies and children frequently get sick when taken visiting. There is a good reason for this. Children under five, and particularly babies under two, are very susceptible to changes in water and milk.

Therefore children under five should stay at home particularly in hot weather. However, circumstances sometimes make it seem best, or necessary, to travel with little children. In that case there are certain precautions which may be taken easily.

The milk used should be brought to a simmering point. This is safer when going by train than to trust to keeping the milk fresh with the facilities at hand.

Boil the water—just bringing it to a boil—then put it into a thermo bottle, after it is cooled.

Rats Cause Subsidence

Rats were responsible for a subsidence in the asphalt pavement in Rosina Street, Homerton. Coming from openings in a sewer, they burrowed channels in the ground beneath the roadway.

Block Island, Watch Hill and Fisher's Island are three charming spots for the summer visitor and are swept constantly by ocean breezes—the temperature rarely rising above 75 degrees. A week at any of these places will do as much good as a sea voyage.

There is splendid Hotel and Boarding House accommodation at prices to suit all pockets.

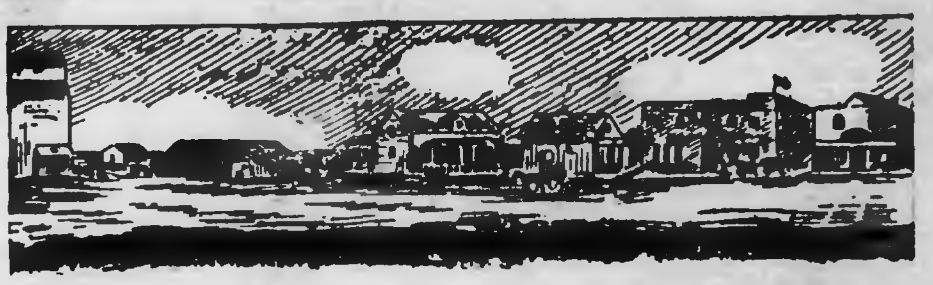
YOU CAN MAKE MONEY IN

Carmangay

"The Star of Alberta"

PAST The splendidly strategic site of Carmangay was discovered by a far seeing, shrewd railway engineer attracted to the district by the lure of the finest wheat in the Canadian West. He snapped up lands where the wide canyons of the Little Bow River narrows to a point. Here must all railways cross. The C. P. R. came and the shipping centre created went ahead by leaps and bounds.



PRESENT Carmangay today is a thriving incorporated town, with not less than 53 business places. Her up-to-date electric and natural water supply systems are owned and operated by the people. Carmangay boasts an eight-roomed schoolhouse, two banks and four big elevators, shipping over a million bushels in 1911 and 1½ millions in 1912. Carmangay has coal mines operating, and the entire district is underlaid with coal of finest Galt quality.

FUTURE Carmangay grows as Alberta grows. That means a wonderful future. Four new railroads are heading for Carmangay. Four new elevators are trying to cope with the tremendous wheat yields of the district. The mines are opening up splendid prospects. Carmangay is being rapidly developed into one of the greatest towns in the Canadian West. YOU can just as confidently invest in Carmangay as her own people do, who are building in brick and stone for a tremendous future. Carmangay has her own supply of finest brick clay and stone right at her doors, and will soon supply her sister cities in Alberta.

FEDERAL GRANTS WILL GREATLY AID AGRICULTURE IN PROVINCES

Agreements Reached as to Expenditure--How Money is to Be Used

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, July 18.—All of the agreements between the provinces and the Dominion for the expenditure of the $700,000 to be used for agricultural education and voted under the Agricultural Instruction Act will be signed within the next couple of weeks. The agreements have all been carefully drafted so that the money will be used to accomplish the greatest possible good and will be used entirely for various lines of educational and instructional work.

The Department of Agriculture has concluded agreements with Ontario, Manitoba, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, regarding the sums which those provinces obtain under the Agricultural Instruction Act.

Two Uncompleted.

Only Quebec and Alberta are yet to be settled with. The total amount distributed this year is $700,000, an increase of $200,000 over last year. This increase is largely absorbed by the flat grant of $20,000 to each province, irrespective of size or population.

Help Smaller Provinces.

The arrangement operates greatly to the benefit of the smaller provinces. In Nova Scotia it has increased from $34,000 to $54,000; in New Brunswick from $24,000 to $44,000 and in Prince Edward Island from $6,000 to $26,000. This is a departure from the principle of absolute adherence to the ratio of population one of the reasons assigned by the Senate for killing the Highways bill, though it did not insist upon such an amendment to the agricultural measure.

Ontario's Agreement.

In Ontario the largest grant into which the total sum of $195,733 is divided is, $80,000 for district representatives, men who are placed in local centres as expert advisers on farming topics. The next largest is one of $51,500 for buildings at the Ontario Agricultural college. This is spread over buildings for poultry, field husbandry, apiary, dairy barn and bacteriologist department.

Agriculture in Schools.

Next in size comes a grant of $10,000 to encourage agriculture in the public schools, partly by grants and partly by helping of teachers to attend courses for instruction. Stock and seed judging courses get $7,500; women's institute work gets $6,500; fall fair and field crop judging courses get $5,300; a similar sums goes to educational work in connection with marketing farm products, organizing co-operative societies, etc. For drainage work there is a grant of $5,000; another grant of $5,000 is for the purpose of getting more land for the Ontario Veterinary college and there are a number of smaller grants.

HALF BILLION OF UNITED STATES CAPITAL FORCED INTO CANADA

President Wilson's Secretary of Commerce Realized Necessity After Defeat of Reciprocity

Toronto, July 18.—Following the utterances of Mr. Eugene N. Foss, Governor of Massachusetts, who has become much worked up of late regarding the influx of United States capital to Canada, statements have been prepared in Washington showing that in 1913 alone, following the defeat of reciprocity, some $500,000,000 of American funds have been invested in Canada, largely in industrial enterprises. "With a reciprocal trade arrangement between the United States and Canada," The New York Journal remarks, "all these companies could have manufactured every dollar's worth of their product with American labor on American soil."

Governor Foss, in his most recent declaration, made yesterday in Boston, says, in part:

"The movement of American manufacturers and American money into Canada has been going on so quietly that it has not attracted much public attention.

Big Concerns Here.

"The General Electric Company has a very extensive plant in Canada; also the Westinghouse Electric Company, the Oliver Chilled Plow Company, the International Harvester Company, the American Locomotive Company, the American Blower Company, the Buffalo Forge Company, the Plymouth Cordage Works, and in fact nearly all the leading concerns of every industry have been compelled to establish branches in Canada.

"To complete the list would be impossible, for in many instances the establishment of these factories is not announced and not made a matter of official record."

GREAT UNIVERSITY IN CHINA PLANNED

Half of Boxer Indemnity May Be Used to Build and Endow It

Pekin, July 18.—Great interest has been aroused by the announcement that an influential English committee is approaching the British government with a request that a portion of the British Boxer indemnity be assigned for the foundation of a proposed British university in Central China. The imposition by the powers in 1901 of the monstrous national fine of $335,000,000 was never justified except on the ground of gross political expediency, the object being to cripple China so permanently that no "Yellow Peril" would be possible.

As it is impossible to imagine that such crude political doctrines were inspired from English sources, it is only right and proper that England dissociates herself, just as America has done, from a piece of real international cruelty. Fortunately, Great Britain's share is small compared with that of others, namely, $37,500,000, or 11 per cent. of the total indemnity.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Fresh west and northwest winds, fair and moderately warm.

TELLS WHY BIG PLANT SHUT DOWN

Thousand Men Get Enforced Holiday in Hamilton—Says It Is the Usual Thing.

Hamilton, Ont., July 18.—H. H. Bigert, general manager of the Canadian branch of the International Harvester Company, to-day made an official statement to allay the startling report that the company would close its big plant up tight and probably not open for months.

"The manufacturing departments of the plant will close to-night for three weeks. The centennial celebration following, we will close for another three weeks. That will take the slack out of the situation and we expect to resume operations on the morning of August 18 with a moderate sized staff. There is nothing unusual in our closing at this time of the year. We close for two weeks every year at this time."

About one thousand men will stop work to-night.

TO BE CHICAGO'S ALDERWOMAN

Mrs. Blasi Tired of Supporting Hinky Dink and Bathhouse John

Chicago, July 18.—There were two important developments here to-day bearing on the new woman suffrage law.

The first was the formal announcement of the candidacy of Mrs. Annia Carlo Blasi to represent the first ward in the city council. The second was the opening of the school for women voters, who were shown how to register and how they cast their ballots by means of voting machines.

For many years Mrs. Blasi has been a leader among the Italians of the 1st ward, and she has lent her aid, admitted as important, to "Hinkey Dink" Kenna and "Bathhouse John" Coughlin, who for time immemorial have been returned to the council by the 1st ward quite as a matter of course.

"But they have been aldermen long enough," said Mrs. Celia Palmer, quoting Mrs. Blasi, who is her mother. Thousands of working men and women of Italian, German, Bohemian and other nationalities have urged her to run," continued Mrs. Palmer, "and although she did not want to at first, she has submitted to the pressure and will make the fight. My father has been persuaded, too, and we are predicting that my mother will be Chicago's first alderwoman."

BASEBALL

The Petes went down to defeat yesterday at Brantford by the score of 8—0. This was the off-day for the boys and it is more than likely that you will see them take another turn at climbing before long.

LICENSE COMMISSIONERS MET LAST EVENING

Mr. Gollop was granted a renewal of the Snowden House license for 1913-14.

The license of Mr. Fred Mitchell was transferred to Mr. Alex Elliott.

The license of Mr. Woodruff of the Grand Hotel, was transferred to Mr E. O. McCrohan.

The Board then adjourned

HON. MR. COCHRANE HERE TO INSPECT

Minister of Railways and Canals Will Thoroughly Investigate Trent Canal

Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, will pass through the city on Tuesday, arriving here from Campbellford and other points on the Southern stretch of the Canal. His visit is to make a systematic tour of inspection of the Trent waterway. This is his first personal inspection of the Canal. In company with Mr. W. A. Bowden, Chief Engineer, and Messrs. J. H. McClellan, Superintendent, and A. J. Grant, resident engineer of the canal, the Minister will take the government Steamer Bessie Butler and made a thorough investigation of conditions along the canal to Lake Simcoe.

The result of this tour of inspection, no doubt, have a direct tendency towards the early completion of the Canal.

WOODSTOCK MAN FOUND DEAD BY BOY

Arnold Shorer, Proprietor of Hotel Oxford, Died Probably from a Weak Heart.

Woodstock, Ont., July 18.—Mr. Arnold Shorer, proprietor of the Hotel Oxford, was found dead fully dressed on a couch on the front balcony of the hotel at seven o'clock to-day by a bell boy who went to call him.

Mr. Shorer was around the house until 1.30 this morning when he went out on the balcony to sleep. He must have died shortly after lying down, probably from heart trouble.

He bought the Hotel Oxford about a year ago and was popular with the travelling public. He was about 40 years of age. He has no relatives in this country.

He was a native of Switzerland, and came here about four years ago.

DEFENCE TO BE UNWRITTEN LAW

Swampscott Man Kills Boarder He Accuses of Persecuting His Wife

Boston, July 18.—After refusing $50 to leave the house permanently Ameleo Marchoice, a boarder in the household of Giovanni Bufalini, 666 Humphrey street, Swampscott, was yesterday shot and almost instantly killed by Bufalini, who accuses the dead man of forcing his attentions on Mrs, Bufalini.

Bufalini surrendered to the police after the shooting and intends, his friends say, to plead the "unwritten law" as his defence. Mrs. Bufalini, prostrated by the shock of witnessing Marchoice shot down before her, declares she will aid her husband in every way possible.

The Bufalinis has lived in Swampscott for 12 years. During the last four years Marchoice, a barber, boarded with them. The victim was seated at the breakfast table in the kitchen yesterday morning, when Bufalina stepped out of his bedroom into the kitchen and pumped three shots at Marchoice from behind. The first entered the back of Marchoice's head and the second creased the right cheek; the third went wild and was imbedded in a wall. Marchoice died almost instantly. Bufalini walked a mile and a half to the Swampscott station where he surrendered to Patrolman Charles Dunlap, after announcing that he had shot a man. He was locked up and later arraigned in the Lynn district court, where his case was continued until to-morrow for a hearing.

Bufalini told the police that because of the boarder's attentions to Mrs. Bufalini he has offered Marchoice $50 last week to leave the house, but the offer was refused, although Bufalini declared that his victim owed him $200 for room and board.

WIFE GIVES LIE TO HUBBYS PLEA

Mrs. J. L. Patten Says He Had No Reason For Slaying Boarder

Shreveport, La., July 18.—Denying that there were undue relations between herself and Tom Clayburn, killed by her husband in their home at Vivian last night, Mrs. J. L. Patten issued a statement tonight contradicting the story told by her husband, now in the parish jail here. Clayburn failed to keep an appointment Friday afternoon to meet Patten and go to Oil City. Patten became suspicious, returned home and shot Clayburn, who boarded at the Patten home.

"Clayburn stalled me so much about the matter, I believed him." the prisoner says, "until I discovered the truth."

According to Mrs. Patten's story she did not advise her husband that she had just been with Clayburn, and she was not at the door of Clayburn's room when Patten came back to the house, but at the telephone. Her husband walked right by her, she says, entered Clayburn's room and killed him. Mrs. Patten is an attractive brunette of about thirty-five years.

FIFTEEN IN PERIL 31 HOURS STOOD IN WATER UP TO NECKS

Men All Foreigners Tell Amazing Story of Efforts to Stem Rising Tide When Entombed in Mine--All Are Safe

Eveleth, Minn., July 18.—Amid scenes of wild excitement the five men who are entombed at the Spruce Mine here Wednesday were brought to the surface last night after having stood neckdeep in water for 31 hours.

Through interpreters, the men all foreigners, told their story. They heard the guards warn the men as the water started rushing down the shaft, but they drew back at the sight of the swirling torrents. As the water crawled up they were submerged first to their waists and then to their armpits and realizing their plight they attempted with picks and shovels to dam the drift. For a time they were unsuccessful, but at last they were able to stem the tide. By this time the water was up to their necks. Standing thus they waited for the rescuers whom they heard working desperately.

When the rescue crew had blasted to within forty feet of them they made a signal which was heard by the rescuers.

CONNAUGHT-FIFE WEDDING RAPID, ROMANTIC AS CAN BE;

Duchess of Fife Has Income of 10,000 Pounds Now and on Death of Her Mother Comes Into Two Fine Properties and 40,000 Pounds a Year

London, July 18.—It is understood here to-day that the Connaught-Fife wedding will be as rapid as a romantic engagement can be, of only ten or eleven weeks duration. The wedding probably will be held in London during October in Buckingham Palace Chapel. The Duke and Duchess will not leave for Canada until afterwards.

On the day of the marriage, the Duchess comes into an income of £10,000 per annum from the estate of her late father.

Mar Lodge, the beautiful Scottish home of the Fife family, as well as the house in London belong to the Princess Royal, the Duchess' mother, for her life.

Eventually the Duchess will inherit both properties and will have a total income, about £40,000.

Prince Arthur will of course succeed his father in the title of Duke of Connaught. His son if he should have one will not be entitled to call himself Royal Highness. The qualification dies out in the third generation from the sovereign. The son, however, would inherit the double Dukedom of Connaught and Fife. It is likely when Queen Alexandra and Princess Victoria visit the Princess Royal and her daughter at Mar Lodge next month, Prince Arthur will spend a few days there, to continue woeing.

NORTH GREY RETURNS

Official Count Gives Mr. C. S. Cameron a Majority of Over Three Hundred and Fifty.

Owen Sound, Ont., July 18.—At one o'clock this afternoon, the returning officer for the north riding of the County of Grey, Mr. John Burns, after the official count, declared Mr. C. S. Cameron the Conservative candidate, elected by a majority of 353. This is considerably larger than at first reported.

THREE THOUSAND GIRLS PANIC STRICKEN BY FIRE

Blaze in Upper Floors of a New Factory, and Many Were Trampled in Wild Rush to Safety

New York, July 18.—At least six persons were seriously burned and a score injured early to-day in a fire which partially destroyed a six-storey factory building at 141 West Twentieth street. Three thousand girls employed in that and adjoining buildings were thrown into a panic and only heroic work by policemen and firemen prevented the loss of many lives.

The fire started in the model Button factory on the third floor of the building, following an explosion in a pile of celluloid. The blaze spread rapidly and within a short time hundreds of men, women and girls were rushing towards the fire escapes.

Many were trampled under foot in the wild rush to safety. The escapes were soon clogged, and many threatened to jump. Firemen put up scaling ladders hurriedly and dragged the victims to safety. Two of the most seriously burned men were taken to a hospital, where their condition is said to be serious.

After a hard fight the firemen kept the blaze confined to the upper floors of the building, in which it started.

Thomas Accoca and Dominic Potano escaped only because of the force of the explosion. They were working at the tank which exploded, mixing a preparation of celluloid and gasolene. When it blew up they were hurled so far that none of the blazing stuff reached them. Here stunned burned about the face and one of them, Accoca, with a broken hip, they crawled to a window, and were helped to earth.

SUBMARINE CREW SAVED BY MIRACLE

Stockholm, Sweden, July 18.—A terrifying accident to a Swedish submarine which sunk with her crew like a stone in 200 feet of water on July 2nd, has just become known, despite official efforts to keep the affair secret.

The submarine was practicing outside the harbor, when by a mistake all of her tanks were filled simultaneously and she sank to the bottom.

The pressure was enormous and the water began to dent the hull.

Desperate measures were necessary and Lieut. Beckman in charge of the boat, ordered the lead keel detached. When this was removed the boat rose to the surface and the shaken crew drew in great draughts of air.

It is stated here that never before has a submarine risen to the surface after sinking to such a depth.

WOMEN'S LEG MUSCLES ARE ALMOST SEEN, NEW GOWNS

Varying Views Held in London on Apparel of the Day --Sculptors Like It For More is Seen

London, July 18.—America is not alone on the women's dress controversy. The filmy sheath transparency now worn, through which every movement of the legs and almost of the muscles can be seen, and the slashings and liftings of the skirt, displaying nether limbs encased in diaphanous silk, not covered by anything but court shoes, raised the question

"Has the Eve-like craze in modern fashions gone too far?"

"As long as daring costumes are the thing, women will wear them," declared a well known modiste in Hanover street yesterday. "The opening in the skirt has become a feature, even in the frocks for fashionable dances, but personally I think it is hideous."

Do Not Appeal.

The manager of another establishment, on the other hand, expressed the opinion that daring costumes did not appeal to a great majority of Englishwomen.

"Even Englishwomen who tolerate the pneumonia blouse," he said, "draw the line at the pneumatic skirt."

"There must be a change soon in the very nature of things," was the view taken by Messrs. Reville and Rossiter, of Hanover Square. "The leaving off process cannot go much further."

A West End nerve specialist declared that the militant suffragettes are almost entirely responsible for the movement, as they have endeavored to emphasize their equality with men by dressing as near as possible in clothes identical with those of the opposite sex.

The opinion of Mr. William Hamo Thornycroft, sculptor, the present day dress is exceedingly beautiful.

"It pleases sculptors," he remarked, "in that more of the human form is visible."

Didsbury Appointment to Be Under Eye of the English Wesleyan Conference.

London, July 18.—The Wesleyan Conference has decided to allow Dr. Coley to put his motion on Monday, requesting the pastoral session to reconsider the appointment of Rev. Geo. Jackson, to Didsbury College on the grounds of his theological views.

CAMPBELL FORGERY CASE

At yesterday's police court, John Campbell, on remand, was again charged with forgery, to wit, a $7.50 on the Bank of Commerce. Campbell, in the absence of Mr. Gordon, was committed for trial. Mr. Chas. Kingan, said Campbell was first seen by him in their store the night of the alleged forgery. Campbell bought some tools and tendered the cheque. Goods produced in court. The tools were $2.75. The cheque was signed by James McIntosh. McIntosh used to live in Simcoe street, but has not been there for months. McIntosh was out of town when the cheque was drawn. The cheque was returned from the bank marked "no account." Prisoner endorsed the cheque whilst in the store. He endorsed it "John McDonald." Here the prisoner tried to prove he, defendant was drunk whilst in store. Mr. Kingan replied: "You evidently had had a few drinks, but were not drunk."

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 50c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 25c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 50c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store. We make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 326 George St., directly opposite Crossman's store.

MIXED FARMING NEEDED

British Columbia Paper Sounds Note of Warning to Orchard Men

Fruit producers in British Columbia will have a large market in Western Canada. The prairie country is probably capable of growing some kinds of fruit, but other crops are likely to be more profitable. This farm population is increasing rapidly, and the habit of buying green fruit will grow on the people. There is also a provincial market, which is now largely supplied by imported fruit. New traffic routes will be opened. Local growers and packers will soon learn all that the fruit growers of Washington State can teach them.

But it is time to consider whether the attention of the people in the fruit-growing district is not fixed too much on fruit growing. Soil that is good for orchards is good for crops. Fruit may seem to offer large returns, but if the whole of the land that is suitable for orchards is planted in trees the production will in a few years be enormous, and a large part of the population will be dependent on the market for one class of commodities.

If this province is admirably adapted to fruit it is also well suited to dairying, stock raising and all kinds of mixed farming. It is sometimes said that the prairie farmers are giving their attention too much to a single crop. There is that tendency everywhere, and British Columbia with a tempting market for all kinds of farm products has the least need to concentrate on one kind of husbandry.—Vancouver News Advertiser.

HON. HENRI S. BELAND, M.P., Beauce, Quebec.

JACK "HORNER" A REALITY

Nursery Legend About the Pie Conceals a Real Tragedy

Few people know that the nursery legend of "Little Jack Horner" conceals a real tragedy.

At the Reformation the chief of an abbey in the West of England resolved to surrender, and in token thereof to send the deeds of the religious house to Henry VIII. at Whitehall. For security's sake the abbot placed the documents in a pie dish and covered them with crust. The dish, without saying a word about the contents, he gave to a lout, Jack Horner, with instructions to carry it by road to the King in London.

About half way Jack Horner became ravenous and came to the conclusion that it was foolish of him to starve while he was the custodian of a pie. So he broke the crust and put in his thumb and pulled out—a roll of parchments! The disgusted Jack Horner chucked the lot into an adjacent brook.

The non-arrival of the deeds caused Bluff King Hal to suspect the abbot of contumacy, so his Majesty commanded that the poor cleric should be hanged.

SPEEDY JUSTICE HERE

Judge Riddell Contrasts Methods in Canada and United States

"I have been practicing for 30 years and never once has it taken me more than 30 minutes to get a jury and two days to try a case," declared Mr. Justice Riddell of the high court of justice for Ontario in an address at Kansas City, Mo. "What amazes me," continued Judge Riddell, "is the enormous length of time it takes you in the United States to try a case. Once in London, Ont., I tried a murder case, one of manslaughter, two other criminal cases and 27 civil cases. In that time an American judge across the line had scarcely half a jury selected to try a murder case."

EXPLAINING HORSE-POWER

Some Idea of the Work Done by Huge Marine Engines

The average man is apt to speak very glibly of so many hundred or thousand horse-power, but it is extremely doubtful whether one person in a hundred has a due appreciation of what the phrase really means.

Calculating the strength of twelve men to be equal to one horse-power it would require 840,000 men to produce as much energy as the 70,000 horse-power developed by the turbine machinery of a big Atlantic steamship. Then, if the men were to work on the eight-hour-day system, those figures would give a total of 2,520,000, that being the number of men whose strength would be necessary to drive the vessel across the Atlantic Ocean.

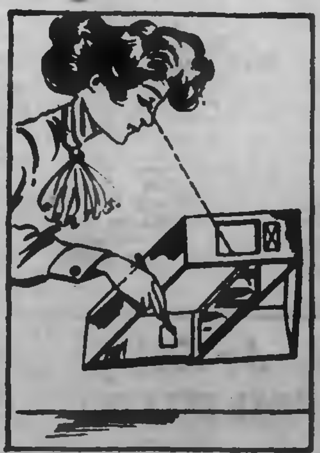
AN AMUSING ILLUSION

Objects Lengthen or Flatten as They Are Being Drawn

An amusing optical illusion is created by the device patented by a Pennsylvania man and shown here. Moreover, the apparatus is not difficult to make. Take six pieces of cardboard and fasten them hingedly together as depicted. They can then be moved either horizontally or vertically at will. Cut an opening in the upper horizontal flap and paste a writing pad in the lower horizontal flap.

Fasten a mirror to the inside vertical flap so that objects drawn on the pad will be reflected up through the opening at the top. Then set the apparatus up and proceed to draw, a face, for example, on the pad. By pressing the frame down and lengthening the angle of reflection, the face will be shown on the mirror long-drawn out and lugubrious-looking. By raising the frame the face will take on the opposite expression, as in convex and concave mirrors in public parks



FRAME MOVES UP AND DOWN

Getting Across Line

The latest ruse adopted by foreigners anxious to enter Canada from the United States to Windsor is to provide themselves with a regulation "return ticket" from an American railroad. Thus armed, the aliens attempt to pass the Canadian frontier, boldly telling the usual story of coming into Canada "on a visit," and exhibiting the return portion of their tickets as evidence that they do not intend to remain on this side of the line. The scheme is not often successful.

"A Progressive Peterborough."

EDITORIAL NOTES

Complaint is heard that the atmosphere on the 12th in Hastings was bad; but it could not be otherwise with all the lids off.

If the esteemed Examiner does not cease its spiteful little flings at the member for West Peterborough, the country may think he has, at some time trod on its bunions.

A Quebec paper says the dancing at a Charity Ball held there, was "simply disgusting." But our contemporary should remember that charity covers a multitude of sins.

Some of our esteemed contemporaries take the ground that if we must have war on earth, the rules should provide for notice being served before the fighting begins. Doubtless they are proceeding on the theory that, "Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just, but four times he who gets his lick in fust."

This g. f. j. would meekly call the attention of politicians to the fact that its predictions are still standing on two legs and in excellent health. Just what happened to the Navy Bill, and to the Liberals in North Grey was outlined in these columns. We now venture one other prediction: Ald. G. N. Gordon will be our next Mayor.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY

The women of Illinois, having secured the ballot, are intently planning a general clean-up of Chicago.

Within the past few years a young, unmarried woman, of college education, but of no particular wealth or influence, has cleaned out one of Chicago's suburbs. Formerly the town was as bad as the rest of Chicago. By her courageous efforts she has driven out every house of ill-fame, every gambling joint and every illegal saloon.

With that example before them, the women of Chicago should demonstrate to the rest of the country the fact that women's suffrage is indeed a thing to be desired.

THE NEW WAR IN THE BALKANS

Servia demands access to the Adriatic and an open route to the Agean: Greece an "adequate hinterland" to Salonica; Roumania, a readjustment of boundaries and new territory; Austria-Hungary the restriction of Servia and the freedom of Albania; Russia, the settlement of difficulties by arbitration and the establishment of Slav hegemony.

Servia looks to the German federation for a parallel and finds that its peril is that of Bavaria and Bulgaria's scheme that of Prussia. For the time being, Servia and Greece find a common cause against Bulgaria.

In the quarrel between Servia and Bulgaria the latter has the advantage of treaty provisions and Servia's position is one of endeavouring to avoid meeting conditions to which she had given agreement.

Bulgaria has rejected all proposals to submit this treaty to revision avoiding compliance with the czar's request that ministers meet in St. Petersburg authorized to submit the controversy to arbitration. The Servian contention that the treaty had been invalidated by the alterations in military arrangements has been answered and Bulgaria, with the expressed approval of Austria-Hungary, has been standing precisely for its treaty rights.

The old Turks stand grimly outside knowing that they have everything to gain and nothing to lose by the fighting among the allies. Everything indicates that the allies who made such tremendous sacrifices in life and treasure to defeat the Turks, will now throw away their victory through mutual distrust of each other.

Do You Feel Moody, Irritable, Depressed?

When That Languid, Loggy, Easily-Tired Feeling Comes, Your Liver is Slow

Tells How to Cure Quickly.

"Even when I was young I was not robust and healthy like other girls. I suffered from headaches, and had sort of blue feelings that deprived me of the joyful spirits and pleasures other girls seemed to get. After I married I found I could not throw worries off like other women, and those full feelings of despondency and weariness made me very unhappy. There was no cause to feel so, and my doctor said my liver was sluggish, and this accounted for my poor color, my tiredness, langor and despair. The pills the doctor gave me were too purgative, made me weaker because they were too active for my constitution. Dozens of my friends recommended Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and they were so mild and helpful. Well, I never used a pill that acted so quietly as Dr. Hamilton's They were so comfortable to use, I was afraid they might not help. But in a week I knew they had been actively engaged in clearing up my system. They did the work of a tonic and blood medicine combined. I improved to a marvelous degree with Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and I now maintain the most perfect kind of health by using them just once or twice a week."

It is Mrs. E. V. Erlanger, well known at Gloucester, who relates the above experience. She proved what you and all other, men and women, can prove—that Dr. Hamilton's Pills are best for restoring health and best for keeping the system in perfect running order. Don't be misled into using anything but Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. a box, five for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or postpaid by the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

PETERBOROUGH SHOULD WAKE UP.

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—The revelation of Eugene G. Foss of how much British capital is coming to Canada and how many factories are pouring in from over the border ought to make us in Peterborough step more lively. We have been doing pretty well but factories are dropping into many Canadian towns that we should have here. We mustn't rest satisfied. Get her going.

HOW ENGLAND TREATS US

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I notice in the press a statement that North Dakota would not allow the exhibits of the Canadian West to be shown in her fairs. The cities of St. Louis and Chicago did practically the same thing with their land shows; it is true that last year Chicago had a change of heart, and that President Woodrow Wilson stands for everything that is opposed to this kind of narrowness.

Would it not be good for us to realize just now how generous Great Britain has been to us as a country?

(1)—She has furnished us with huge sums of money for our transportation and industrial development.

(2)—She has defended us in our days of weakness, with men, ships and money, without our paying one cent either on taxes or direct contributions.

(3)—She has allowed us to advertise our lands and to take her people as colonists to such an extent as to cause a most serious shortage of agricultural laborers for her own farm work.

No country on earth has treated her colonies with such consideration. She is now ready to treat us as a sister nation in the world's greatest empire. What return have we made for it?

We had an opportunity to do something generous and effective, and a section of our politicians through a partisan senate, appealing to everything that was meanest in human nature, killed, momentarily that opportunity. Let every decent Canadian bear it in mind next election.

I enclose my card, which will show that I am not British born, but that my family has been Canadian for over a century. Yours truly.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT IN MANUFACTURING WAY

An English Publication Has an Article Setting Forth Some Facts Tersely

A Canadian writes Tariff Reform Notes, an English publication, as follows:

"I think there are very few people in England who have any conception of what Canada's development in a manufacturing way amounts to, or what an important part it plays in our national life. Let me give you some figures. In 1900, when the previous census was taken, the value of the output of Canadian factories for the year was $481,000,000. For the year 1910 when the last census was taken the value had jumped to $1,162,000,000 for the year, a percentage of increase which I do not believe has ever been equalled by any other country in the world in the same length of time. During the ten-year period from 1900 to 1910 we added 4,552 new factories to those already established in Canada, or an average of 450 per year, or three new factories established for every two working days in the year.

Canadian Employes

The employes in our factories numbered, according to the census, 511,844, which means that one in every fourteen of the entire population of Canada is actually working in a factory. When to these you add, first those who are directly dependent upon those, such as wives, mothers and children, and others indirectly dependent upon them, such as the butcher, the baker, the doctor, the lawyer, or whoever it may be, I think you will recognize what a tremendous portion of the population are dependent upon the industries for maintenance and support. And that industrial activity and development owes its being almost entirely to the policy of protection which we have adopted. We in Canada think it is a good thing for that part of the empire, whatever centre it may be, Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg, if it is being built up and developed, rather than Pittsburg, Buffalo, or Chicago, and we are able to keep our people at home rather than

A CHILD'S VOCABULARY

Take a paper and pencil, follow the child for several days, several weeks, putting down every new word that is uttered. And when the word "child" is used, it does not refer to a boy or girl of seven or eight, but one of three.

An investigation recently made by following a child at that age and noting every word that was used showed that it had memorized 1,771 different words. They covered practically everything with which the child came in contact, and were words the child had never heard before.

Another investigation of words used by children between 16 months and 18 months old showed that the lowest vocabulary that was reported included the use of sixty words. The highest was 232 words. From two years on the vocabulary of a child increases rapidly until at 3 years the average child has a vocabulary of at least 1,000 words.—Answers.

A RECORD LAND DEAL

Over Half a Million Acres for Colonization in British Columbia

Another of those gigantic land deals for which western Canada is attaining a wide reputation was made public in the purchase of 550,000 acres of land in Northern British Columbia by Mr. Laughlin Maclean and his associates for a consideration of $2,750,000. This constitutes what is probably the largest real estate transaction ever carried through in the Pacific northwest. The land which was selected along the northern lakes and rivers was acquired from various British Columbia syndicates and six months was required to complete the deal. Of the holdings affected, 150,000 acres are in the Nation Lakes district; 100,000 on Babine Lake; 200,000 on the North Tacla Lake; and 100,000 on the Naas River. The general character of the soil is a deep black loam and probably 25 per cent. of the land is open meadow, the remainder being covered with light growths of timber and underbrush. In the work of colonization the purchasers will have the co-operation of the provincial government which has already built trunk highways through the districts and as fast as they are colonized will construct school houses and lateral highways. Babine Lake is 110 miles long and 5 miles wide and is navigable for the largest steamers.

MARRIAGE TOO EASY

Detroit Judge up in Arms Against Gretna Green Methods

The Judge was moved to his declaration against the "Windsor marriage bureau" because of the large number of complaints filed in the Detroit Divorce Court, the principals in which declared they had been wedded in Windsor and then parted after a few weeks.

AN OLD ROCKING CHAIR

R. J. Corwin, of Niagara Falls, Ont., has in his possession an old-time rocking chair which was presented to him by an old lady friend. She claimed at the time ofpresentation that the at the time of presentation that the General Sir Isaac Brock had rocked in it. Mr. Corwin prizes the chair very highly as a relic. On making some repairs and in removing the varnish he discovered the maker's stamp, plainly engraved on the inside of one of the rockers, and the date 1712, so this old chair has passed its two hundredth anniversary.

Grinding Pulp-Wood

A study made of methods of making the paper for newspapers or magazines by grinding up wood on a grindstone, in the government laboratory at Madison, Wis., showed that a dull stone will make the best paper. The grindstone grinds the wood into wood pulp. If it is rotating in thick pulp the pulp, water, and stone are kept hot; if it is revolving in water, the wood is ground in the cold. Before grinding, the log is always kept in steam for a few hours.

Green wood gives a paper of a much better color than seasoned wood, and the upper is stronger if the wood is steamed before it is ground than when it is ground in the natural state.

New Idea For Street Cars

Several Canadians were passengers on the first train in the world to be operated by electricity generated by a portable storage battery. The trial took place at New York, and Thomas A. Edison, the "wizard of electricity" who was also present, prophesied that the new system would revolutionize the operation of railroad trains and street cars.

THE BRITISH CANADIAN
BRICK AND COAL COMPANY, LTD.

Incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act.
NO PERSONAL LIABILITY

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL - $500,000.

Consisting of

$200.000. 7 Per Cent Preferred at $10.00 Per Share, with Bonus of 25 per cent Common. $300.000 Common at $10.00 per share

DIRECTORS:

J. S. DOUGLAS, Merchant, Winnipeg.
W. F. TALLMAN, Street Commissioner, Winnipeg.
A. B. WOOLDRIDGE, Gentleman, Winnipeg.
D. W. McKERCHAR, Barrister, Winnipeg.
V. A. TALBOT, Real Estate Broker, Winnipeg.

The above Company has purchased from the Excelsior Coal and Brick Co., Ltd., their whole plant as a going concern, the purchase price to be taken in shares of the new Company, and it is the intention of the Directors to equip the plant to make it one of the largest in the West.

The plant is situated in that rich tract of mineral producing country surrounding Estevan, and is near the town. It comprises 640 acres of the best clay and coal to be found anywhere.

The shaft of the coal mine has been sunk to a depth of seventy feet to reach a seam of the best lignite coal, and there are enough entries and passages to enable an output, at slight expense, of 200 tons of coal per day. Other mines in the district are producing less and making considerable profit. A conservative estimate of the profit on each ton is $1.00, but from Government borings near the property it has been shown that there is a seam of coal 650 feet from the surface which is similar to the Lethbridge coal, and which could be sold f.o.b. the mine for at least $5.00 per ton, netting the Company $3.50 per ton. It is to reach this seam and further equip the brick plant that the issue of stock has been made.

There is a constant and ever-increasing demand for brick. At the present moment the price for common brick all over the West is from $12.50—$13.00 per thousand. The clay on our property is of the finest, and makes a brick second to none. We can make bricks for about $4.00 per thousand, so that the profit on the product is considerable. It is the intention of the Company to increase the present brick plant to allow of an output of from 75,000—100,000 common bricks per day, and at least 25,000 pressed bricks, which retail at $25.00 per thousand and cost about $7.00 to produce.

Under the coal there is a strata of fireclay, which is extremely scarce in Canada, and commands a high price. It is intended to instal a machine for the making of fire brick, which is being almost entirely brought from the United States and Scotland; also to manufacture sewer pipes and hollow tiles. Firebrick and hollow tiles command the high price of $40.00 per thousand, and we can make them for less than $8.00.

Coal and brick run in conjunction is probably the finest profit-making combination known. It has been proven over and over again that with competent management such a proposition is a success from the first.

The Directors have insured the success of the new Company by engaging the services of one of the most expert brick men in the West, who will supervise the laying out and working of the new plant.

It is with unbounded faith in the future of this western country that the Directors have decided on offering to the public a share in its development and wealth. The man who invests in this proposition makes a two-fold investment. He invests and aids in the development of his country, and at the same time puts his capital to profitable use.

Cincinnati, July 18.—Addison Brennan, the young southpaw, who has been such a big help to Dooin and the Phillies this spring, was traded by the Cincinnati club for the then all-in Bob Ewing in 1911.

RING.

New York, July 18.—All champions nowadays seem to practice the gentle art of "hanging on." Over in England they have perpetual title-holding down to a science. In tennis the title holder sits and looks on while the perspiring challengers fight their way through a long tournament. The moment that is over the English champion takes on the winner. The champion is fresh and unworried. The survivor of the tournament, quite naturally is weary, stale, brain and nerve fagged. The champion has an advantage that insures victory if he is at all fit. That was what McLoughlin was up against. After going through a gruelling series of matches that left him about all in, he went on next day with the title holder. He wasn't up to his game, and he lost.

Jack McAuliffe says present-day champions are looking for easy marks. In a recent interview McAuliffe remarked that the majority of the fighters at present do not seem to study any particular system of hitting. They just appeared to let their blows go any old place, and they seemed to miss as often as they hit. According to Jack's idea, nothing much could be gained by that style of fighting. He says that the proper way tp box is to have some definite idea where the blow is intended. and to practice that sort of hitting until it was possible to land on any one spot as often as the boxer felt like it, and to get away without a return.

Bouin was considered the greatest runner in the world until the last Olympic games at Stockholm, when he was beaten by Hannes Kolehmainen, the Finn, who is now running in America. Until Kolehmainen reached the Stockholm stadium Bouin was the favorite for world's honors. He had won hundreds of races in fast time, had defeated all the best runners in Europe, and had hung up many records and won many titles.

In the 5000-metre race at the Olympic games Bouin ran a poor race at the start, but came fast at the end.

RETURNING TO THE LAND

Canadian Born Artisans Find Little Attraction in Eastern States Now

"The tide is turned and the pressure is backwards," writes Dr. Andrew Macphail in the University Magazine. "The word has gone forth that the Eastern States are finished for the wage earners. Men who went there thirty years ago as artisans find themselves with scant savings and their sons growing up as factory hands. In their extremity they call to mind the pleasant hillsides of Quebec and the fertile valleys of the Maritime Provinces from which they came, where their fathers led the lives of freemen and not the mere existence of slaves. The problem will solve itself in terms of freedom, to which eventually all men come who are born free. In the return to the land it is the first person who counts. Others follow, and more because they must. It will attach itself to the soil again to love the land of its birth. One part of the country is as good as any other to one who was born there. A tree is more easily transplanted than a man, and once rooted it should not be disturbed. City dwellers are much like driftwood which yet has some capacity for regeneration. When they come to a full comprehension of the futility of the machines and the factory, they will learn to apply their labor to the thing itself and not to the making of machines which yet leave the thing undone. Ancient wars had their origin in the desire to bring a people into bondage, or in the resolve of a people to be free. Modern wars have their origin in the desire to exploit a people by planting industries amongst them upon the fictitious plea of economic necessity. To-day the war is between those, on the one hand, and those who produce more than they consume. Rising prices are a sign of the conflict. There can be but one ending to it."

TONS OF BIBLES PRINTED YEARLY

Enormous Output of One Great Publishing House—Demand in Canada for Diglot Edition

There is only one book in the world whose annual output from a single publishing house is quoted at 500 tons.

There is only one book in the world that can, in the nineteenth century of its age, double the demand for itself in three years.

There is only one book in the world that is translated into 630 tongues, read from the igloo of the Eskimo through the grass hut of the Hausa trader, clear down to the last lone village of the Southern and most South Sea Islander. It is the Bible, of course.

"The Brittish and Foreign Bible Society alone issues its book in 440 languages," said Dr. R. Kilgour, editorial superintendent of that institution, while on a visit to Canada, "and eight new tongues were added last year, one for an obscure tribe in an island beyond Borneo, one for a people on the borders of Siam, one for New Guinea, two for Africa, two in European Gypsy dialects, and one for the Chinooks who are scattered from Oregon to Alaska along the Pacific. The young people of this tribe could read English, but the old folk longed for at least a little portion of their own jargon. So, of course, the society had to give it to them.

Fifteen Millions a Year

"Last year we issued 7,000,000 bibles, testaments, and portions," Dr. Kilgour went on, "and when you add to this the contributions of the society of Scotland, the German and the American societies, you'll find that the old book was turned out in upwards of fifteen milion copies." These bibles are distributed not only through branches, but are carried to the farthest, queerest corners of the world by an army of 1,100 colporteurs. In the cafes and music halls at Budapest, on the docks at Antwerp, in the apple orchards of Tasmania, the nitrate fields of Chili, the mines of Johannesburg—everywhere these silent, intrepid missionaries go with the old book.

The Diglot Edition

And Canada has been the cause of about $80,000," said Dr. Kilgour. "At the newest departure in the society's plans—the diglot edition. Here we see the English, side by side with any one of 29 other languages. Port Said, Johannesburg, and Winnipeg lead the world in the use of these diglots.

"And I'm inclined to think Winnipeg comes first," said Dr. Kilgour.

One doesn't wonder that an income of over a quarter of a million pounds sterling is needed for so stupendous a work.

"Last year we had a deficit of 16,000 pounds," said Dr. Kilgour. "At first we couldn't understand it, but when the figures came in we realized that it was because of the enormously increased demand from China, Japan, and India. Asia is waking up."

TWO OLD CHURCHES

Montreal Has One With Foundations Two and Half Centuries Old

The old Bonsecours Church is the oldest stone church in Montreal, or probably in the Dominion. It was commenced in 1657; burned in 1754; reconstructed in 1772; and restored in 1888. The first church was of wood and was the united effort of the first colonists, who were aided, both by the zeal and the means of Mother Bourgeois, who came out to teach the young alike of the Indians and the early settlers. The original foundations of the church remain intact.

St. Gabriel's Presbyterian Church on the Champ de Mars dates back to 1792; but the old Bonsecours was commenced at a time when the colony was still in its infancy, and the Indians were a source of constant terror to the handful of men and women who, acting as they believed under the inspiration of God, came out to the wilderness to civilize and Christianise the barbarous aborigines.

AN IMMENSE ORCHARD

Fourteen Hundred Acres of British Columbia Fruit Farm

Among the largest individual orchards in British Columbia is that owned by J. D. Anderson, about fourteen miles from Rossland.

Here he owns 1,400 acres, which he purchased when land was cheap, from the Provincial Government. On this tract he cleared 130 acres and 120 of this was planted with 11,000 fruit threes and about 4,000 small fruits, including raspberry, blackberry, currant and gooseberry bushes.

A majority of the trees are of the known popular commercial varieties which give the best results in British Columbia. For instance, he has 3,000 Jonathans, 3,000 Mackintoshes, and 2,500 Northern Spies.

Trees are planted with a surveyor's transit and a 300-foot steel tape, and from whatever angle they are looked at present symetrical appearance. A few acres are donated to potatoes and other vegetables, and more to clover, which yields an immense crop.

Besides fruit, Mr. Anderson has 500 White Leghorn chickens, a number of pedigree Berkshire hogs, a large flock of ducks and five hives of bees, which number of swarms will naturally increase. Bees are a necessary part of the orchardist's plant, as they aid in fertilizing the blossoms by carrying the pollen from one tree to another.

From fifteen to twenty men are constantly employed in and about the orchard which has been carried along on the best scientific lines, and in such a manner as to make a failure almost impossible.

Fears the "ic"

A man who spends much of his time figuring on the whys and wherefores of the world and its people has come to the conclusion that sailors will steer clear of vessels that have names ending in "ic" for the reason that the "Arctic" was lost in 1854; the "Pacific" in 1856; the "Atlantic" in 1873; the "Naronic" in 1893; the "Republic" in 1909, and the "Titanic" in 1912; all of these wrecks being notable di asters for loss of life and property or both.

LEARNED TO DRAW IN BUSY STREET

Famous Canadian Painter Got His First Lesson From Pavement Artist in London

Prominent among Canadian artists is Mr. Frederick S. Challoner and behind his rise into the front rank of painters in this western hemisphere lies a world of romance worthy of the great days of the past, when the homeless hero went forth penniless into the world with nothing but a stout heart, a strong will and an unconquerable resolve to make his mark.

Mr. Challoner learned his first lessons in painting on the pavement in a busy street in Stratford, London, where an ex-seaman by his artistic skill drew forth from the passers-by a scanty shower of coppers from the busy throng of workmen who then as now passed and repassed in this industrial centre of Britain. Challoner watched with great interest as the old seaman rapidly sketched the Tay bridge disaster, the bombardment of Alexander by the British fleet, and kindred subjects, watched while the well-known facial lines of Gladstone and Disraeli found a place on the city's pavement.

Came to Canda

A little later the British boy made his way to Canada and within a few hours found a niche as office boy in a Toronto place of business. That is nearly thirty years ago, and during practically all those years the artist of to-day has been plying his profession in one form or another, first with amateurish effort with little or no reward, until to-day he occupies a leading position in the Dominion in the fields of mural and portrait painting.

Soon after his arrival on this side of the Atlantic Mr. Challoner secured a position in the artist's department of a lithographic establishment, and in the five years passed there, such progress was made that he decided to establish himself as a painter.

Ability Recognized

The artistic men and women in the locality quickly recognized his genius and worth and he was made a member of the Ontario Society of Artists, a connection which still exists. Then he was elected an associate of the Royal Canadian Academy of Art, and finding a useful as well as a profitable field in the land of his adoption Mr Challoner has continued to reside on this continent, save when in pursuit of local coloring for European and other eastern work.

FROZEN BY FISH-POWER

A Nova Scotian's Tale of Ice-Cream Making

A New York editor received the following letter:

"I have read an interesting account of singing fish in your paper. It recalled to me the memory of a rather remarkable fish we have in Nova Scotia. It is known as the 'Frost Fish,' because it may be frozen like a lump of ice, but, if placed in water in that condition, it soon thaws out and swims around as vigorously as ever. The natives make use of this property to make ice cream. The fish is caught, frozen, and placed in the cream. In thawing out it freezes the cream, and its movements at the same time heat the mixture, making it smooth."

Here are the editor's remarks:

"Taking them by and large, from Moosehead Lake to Puget Sound and from the upper Mississippi to the Gulf, we have some very capable and industrious fish liars in this country. But we hand the reel and rod over to Nova Scotia. We have talent in this country; but Nova Scotia is the abode of genius."

FIRST SEWING MACHINES

Pioneer of all Made Over 150 Years Ago

The earliest attempt at sewing by machinery of which there is any authentic record was in 1755, when a machine was patented in England by Charles F. Weisenthal. In this machine the stitch was formed by a needle, having two points with an eye at midlength, which passed completely through the goods in imitation of hand sewing.

This was followed by an English patent dated July 17, 1790, granted to Thomas Saint, for a machine that embodied several features which are employed in the modern sewing machine, namely, an overhanging arm, a horizontal cloth plate, a vertically reciprocating needle, and a feeding device, notched at the lower end, pushed a loop of thread through a hoop previously made by an awl. The loop thus formed was held beneath the goods and the next loop passed through it, thus making what is known as the chain-stitch.

In 1804 an Englishman named Duncan made a chain-stitch machine that employed two hooked needles, and in 1830 a Frenchman named Barthelemy Thimonnier invented a machine which embodied the Saint principles with the exception that the loop of thread was pulled instead of pushed through the fabric.

Death of Naval hero

Stoker Brown, a Navy man, who had an eventful career, died at Aberdeen. One incident in his life has been enshrined in standard history books as a type of the valor of the British Navy. Brown was one of the crew of the ill-starred transport-boat Megaera. When off the island of St. Paul, in the Southern Ocean, the Megaera sprung a leak. All hope of saving either crew or vessel was given up, when Brown crawled down into the hold of the vessel, found the leak, and successfully fixed an iron plate over it. The vessel had to be run ashore at this island, where she lay a derelict for three months. The crew had very little to eat, and were on the verge of starvation, when Brown went down to the disabled vessel, and by firing the boilers was the means of refloating the boat.

HABIT OF ATTENTION

A Desirable Quality to Cultivate in Children

Concentration is neither more nor less than a habit—the habit of paying attention, and the lack of concentration is merely the habit of not paying attention. Every day of his life after he understands the spoken language, each child is drilled in one or the other of these habits; the habit—which is the gift of the mother, not of the gods—is usually firmly fixed by the time he is 3 or 4 years old. The child who up to the age of 6 has paid attention to what his mother says will pay attention to what his teachers says. The child who up to the age of 6 years has never paid respectful attention to what anybody says will not pay attention to what his teacher says. Why should he? How can he? Inattention has been his daily habit for years; every time his mother has spoken to him she has riveted the habit more firmly in place until she herself honestly believes that it is an inborn trait. No educational opportunities that we may provide for the older child can ever possibly atone for so bad a habit forced upon him in his helpless babyhood. But the habit of attention which any mother can give by taking thought, will go far to atone for the lack of educational opportunities that are unattainable.

For Baby's Bed

A comforter for the baby's bed can easily be made at home. A pretty one is of white china silk trimmed with small pink roses. The materials required for this fascinating article are two yards of silk, three and one-half yards of pink ribbon and one pound of cotton batting.

Take one yard of the silk and mark the positions of the roses. Arrange these in seven rows across the width and seven across the length, alternating four and three roses. Start the rows four inches from the edge.

Baste one piece of silk to a layer of cotton before joining the other piece. Sew through the two edges of silk and the cotton at the places marked for the roses, and neatly whipstitch the four sides of the comforter together. To fashion the ribbon roses take one-eight of a yard of ribbon a half inch in width. Turn under the edges and crease the ribbon at the centre. Roll the ribbon around until a centre is formed and sew firmly in position. Swirl the remainder of the ribbon loosely around the heart of the rose until it is completed.

Fasten a rose securely to each piece marked on the comforter.

BRITAIN LEADS IN NAVAL POWER

Line-up of the Six Great European Powers Shows Her Apparently Safe Position

There is much food for reflection and many interesting comparisons to be drawn from figures contained in a return issued by the British Admiralty regarding the naval resources of the six leading European Powers. In carefully prepared tables is set down the exact effective sea fighting strength of Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Russia, and Austro-Hungary.

Exclusive of dreadnoughts, battle cruisers, armored, protected, or unprotected cruisers on the stocks, and without including 30 torpedo boat destroyers and four torpedo vessels in the yards of the builders, England's mighty fleets, according to the report totalled 557 ships of all classes, every one of which was ready for sea at once or at least within a few hours notice.

There were 55 battleships and four battle cruisers of the Indomitable class, "mystery ships," as they are termed, 34 comparatively fast armored cruisers, 18 protected cruisers of the first class, 38 protected cruisers of the second class, 16 protected cruisers of the third class, five unprotected cruisers, eight scout vessels, 26 torpedo vessels including special vessels such as depot snips, 179 torpedo boat destroyers, 109 torpedo boats and 65 submarines.

Ranged up alongside the British figures in the report were those of Germany which was shown to have 28 completed battleships, 2 battle cruisers, 9 armored cruisers, 26 second class cruisers, 11 of the third class, 6 unprotected cruisers, 109 torpedo boat destroyers, 30 torpedo boats and 13 submarines, the entire fleet of the Fatherland aggregating 289 vessels not including 69 building to the 75 vessels in the hands of British shipbuilders.

France's Big Navy

It will perhaps come as a surprise to the majority of people to learn that the war fleet of France is just over 50 per cent. better than that of Germany, the Republic being credited with 21 battleships, 21 armored cruisers, 5 protected cruisers, 4 second class armored cruisers, 6 third class cruisers, 2 torpedo vessels, 68 torpedo boat destroyers, 161 torpedo boats, nearly as many as Great Britain's and Germany's combined, and 53 submarines.

Little Lies.

I had something of a shock the other day. I told a man something in what I thought was confidence and he immediately went off and told it. When I saw him again I asked him what on earth possessed him! He said he was awfully sorry, simply didn't think. "But I can fix it up," he said. "The next time I see that fellow" (the one he told) "I'll simply say you didn't say it." "But I did!" said I. "Why, certainly," said he. "But I don't think so much of little lies. You simply have to tell them to get on in business." Well, he went on off, and I don't know just what to think about it. But this I do know, that the next time that particular person says such and such a thing is so, I may and I may not believe it. That's the answer, it seems to me, on the subject of lies, big or little. In the last analysis they may or may not be immoral. But they lower at once the credit of the one who tells them.

A reputation for telling the truth is like a bank account. You can even borrow money on it on occasion.—New York Press.

INVENTOR OF THE TELEPHONE

Claim to Honor Has Been, and Is Likely to Continue, a Matter of Discussion.

Priority in the invention of the telephone is a matter of discussion. The principle of the transmission of sound vibrations mechanically for short distances was known for a long time before the electric principle was applied. The discovery by Dr. C. G. Page of Salem, Mass., in 1837 of the sound given out by an electric magnet at the instant of the closing or breaking of the circuit and of the musical note produced by rapidly revolving the armature of an electro-magnet in front of the poles were made the basis of experiments by many investigators and were important features of early attempts made to transmit sound and speech electrically. The theory that sounds might be made to vibrate a metal plate which would open and close an electric circuit and that a similar plate at a receiving station would be acted on electromagnetically and thus give out as many pulsations as there were breaks in the current was advanced by a French writer as early as 1854. Alexander Graham Bell, an American by adoption, though born in Edinborough, Scotland, in 1847, is the inventor of the speaking telephone, for which he was granted patents in 1876. An imperfect form of his telephone was exhibited at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876. Before Bell's practical work Reis and a number of European scientists had evolved a primitive electric telephone which depended upon the interruption of the electric current rather than upon its variation in strength to correspond with the vibrations of the transmitter.

SHORT, PITHY WORDS

Life, death, false, true, foul, love, lust, hate, these are little words that mean great things, and most of the simple notions and essential qualities may be expressed in English by one syllable. And the oldest things with which man is concerned are called mostly by short names. Sword, wife, house, land, and horse and plough, the ox alive in Saxon's field and as "beef" on the Norman's table, wine and bread friend and grave and God, these all are monosyllables.

So when language begins to deal with primitive life or the most essential human things, the short words grow in number. The English Bible and the noblest hymns are full of monosyllables:

O God, our help in ages past
Our hope for years to come.

And modern literary artistry, knowing how simple things are best expressed with dignity, translates Homer into language nearly Biblical.

As ideas grow complex, words grow longer, and it happens that English owes most of its "higher" and learned words to Latin tongues that know not the Teuton's brevity.—London Spectator.

A BIG CITY'S NAME

Montreal a Corruption of Name Applied to Mountain

When, in 1535, Jacques Cartier visited the Montreal of the future, he was struck with the physical conformation of the place. Ascending the mountain, and surveying the glorious scene which lay at his feet, and the beyond, he gave the name of Mount Royal to the eminence.

The city, when it acquired the semblance of substantiality, was called "Ville Marie," and after the first Mass had been sung by the later band which came out with Maisonneuve, there was solemn dedication of the new city to the Virgin, which makes the statue of the latter on Bonsecours Church, overlooking the river, congruous to original thought and ideal.

But "Mount Royal" easily slid into "Montreal." Always, the long word finds happy abbreviation. The hurry of life ignores the polysyllable; and "Montreal" became the inevitable short cut for "Mount Royal."

In the ancient writings—ancient, as we could count age in a new country—the city is invariably called "Ville Marie," and even to this day, in the back parishes Montreal is referred to as "Ville Marie."

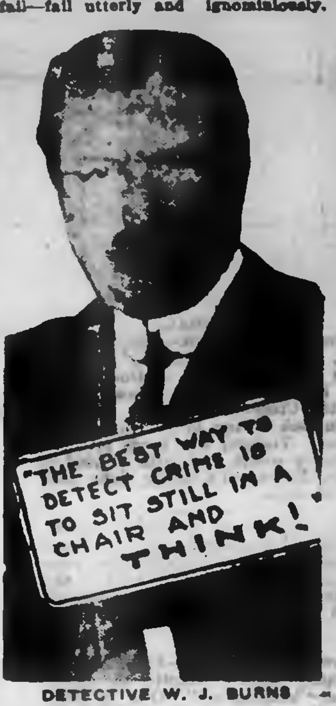
BURNS DISCOURSES ON DETECTIVE ART

The Well Known Detective Says That Honesty at the Bottom of Success

"Be honest, boys!"

William J. Burns shot out these words, and banged his two fists down hard on the table.

It was "Burns the detective." "Be honest—just honest—and that's about all there is to this whole game. Any boy at all who is honest, really honest by nature, can become a successful detective," he added, "if he possesses average keenness of intellect and a trained mind. But with every other quality, if honesty be lacking, he will fail—fail utterly and ignominiously.



"THE BEST WAY TO DETECT CRIME IS TO SIT STILL IN A CHAIR AND THINK!"

DETECTIVE W. J. BURNS of International reputation

"A man who is not honest with others—who is a 'crook' by nature—cannot be honest with himself either," Burns declared. "And unless a man is honest with himself, he can't trail a sand-piper along a wet beach! For he will pretend, even to himself, that he is traveling the right route, though not really sure in his heart of hearts that he is!

"And why?"

"Because it is easier.

"Dishonesty always seeks the easy way.

"The entire status of the detective is undergoing a great change," Burns went on. "It is coming at last into it own. It 's the kind of a business that young men are going to be proud to be in in the future, although in the past it has been left too much to crooks.

"I have just taken into my force now several young college graduates. They are learning to be skilled detectives. They find the work fascinating, and besides it appeals to them as service to humanity.

"Whenever I look over a young man as a possible detective, I look for six characteristics. They are:

Honesty.
Resourcefulness.
Observation.
Imagination.
Analytical power.
Perseverance.

"With these qualities any young man can be trained to be a sleuth of the first water.

"A detective uses no uncanny methods for ferreting out criminals. He is only human, after all, you know, and can only call into the quest the common tools of humanity. All he can do is to concentrate and develop to their utmost the six powers I have named.

"The best way to detect crime is to sit still in a chair and think. In a given case the thing to do is to muster all known facts before you consider them carefully, analyze them and then formulate a theory on these facts.

"And that is where the college-trained mind comes in. It has been taught to make logical deductions.

"After the detective has sat on the seat of his swivel chair in his home office and thought and thought long and hard, as any business man would think, then he goes out to test this theory.

"Just as often as the facts seem to change, just so often must the theory change, so as to make it always fit the facts."

Chimney fires could be easily remedied if people would only take a little trouble to clean out the pipes and chimneys. This has always been a dirty task, and probably always will be, but it can be accomplished with a minimum of trouble and dirt if a home-made cleaner is constructed along the lines shown in the sketch. The central pole can be made as long as needed and it can be made in several pieces so that it can be joined together. The commonest and cheapest scrub brushes are all th is necessary.

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

—BY—

CLIVE PHILLIPPS WOLLEY

(AUTHOR OF "GOLD, GOLD IN CARIBOO," ETC.)

"It seems a pity, doesn't it?" she said, as she and Kitty, with Anstruther, watched Jim and his men at work, "but I suppose Jim is right."

"He must be," asserted Anstruther, but his tone belied his words.

"It would be a terrible sell if the Indians really had gone for good; as Mr. Anstruther thinks."

"We could put up with that, Kitty, don't you think, although I confess that I don't like seeing my buildings go."

"Why don't you tell Jim to let them stand till Mr. Rolt comes back? You tell him, Mr. Anstruther."

"I? Scarcely, Miss Kitty. Jim is commander-in-chief. I am only the invalid. I am not even honored with a place on guard."

"Jim does not think you are fit for duty yet, and you know that you are not."

"I know that I am fit for very little, but I should like to try to be of some use if the admirable Jim would let me," said Mr. Anstruther.

"He gives you the place of honor as our special guard, sir."

"Yes, he is good enough to consider me fit to be left with—in charge of the ladies."

Mrs. Rolt smiled. She understood what he would have said, and did not make allowances either for the irritability of an invalid, or the impatience of a man put at a disadvantage in the eyes of the woman he loved.

"Try to put up with us yet a little while," she said. "Dick will be back soon, now."

Kitty said nothing until he had left the room, then she turned to her friend:

"I think Jim treats Mr. Anstruther pretty badly."

"Badly? What do you mean, Kitty? He sees that he has the best of everything, and never asks him to do a hand's turn. What more can Mr. Anstruther expect?"

"I think he would rather have less consideration as an invalid and more work as a man."

"But he can't do anything."

"Jim might let him try."

"At any other time, yes, and so no doubt he would, and do his work for him after he had made a mess of it, but Jim can't afford to think of people's feelings just now, and to be candid, I don't think your friend is showing to advantage. We have done all we can for him, and now he sulks."

Kitty flushed to the temples. She [illegible] more than a shadow of truth in Mrs. Rolt's charge, but her sympathies were with Frank, though even to her he had been curiously cold and distant since Jim's return.

Never in her life had Kitty's bright temper been more sorely tried than during those days of seige. She had been used all her life to have men for her playmates. Now she had no playmates; she had not even a lover. Since his return to the ranch Jim had watched over her and Mrs. Rolt with the most unfailing courtesy; had forgotten nothing; had forestalled every wish; and even to Anstruther had been courtesy itself; but avoiding any outward demonstration, he had kept Kitty at a distance.

So had her patient. Everything that a man could do to show his gratitude Frank had done, but in some undefinable way he had drawn himself further away from her every day, until to the poor little woman, the love that had been so nearly spoken seemed now but a dream of her own imagining.

Each of the men seemed bent on leaving her to the other. She detested Jim for his many perfections, and could not love Frank because he simply would not let her.

To this uncomfortable state of things Dick Rolt returned, acquiescing in all the arrangements which Combe had made.

"I did not tear down the stables until you came, but they ought to go along with the other buildings if you think that the Indians are still likely to make trouble."

"They may be here any minute. They are too strong to sit down under the dressing we gave them. There must be fifty armed men at least, and they know that there are only four of us, and one of us wounded. How is Al now?"

"Oh, he will do all right. It was only a flesh wound. He has lost a lot of blood, but the old chap says that he has plenty more. But if we tear down the stables what are we going to do about the horses?"

"Turn them loose to rustle for themselves, and take their chance of being shot. We can do nothing else."

"It won't do to leave ourselves without horses. We might have to ride for our lives, after all."

"It can't come to that."

"It might, Rolt. Think of the women."

Rolt groaned. "I'm never thinking of anything else, Jim. What do you advise?"

"Well, if you ask me, I should knock out a partition or two, and make the dining-room and one of the others into a stable. It will play the devil with the house, but we can fix that up again when the trouble is over. If you say the word I'll have feed brought in, and horses for the ladies and half the men."

"Why half?"

"We can't manage more, and we shouldn't want them. If it comes to a show down some of us will have to stay to hold the Indians whilst the others get through."

"Which horses shall we bring in?"

"Mrs. Rolt's, Miss Kitty's, your own, that stallion (he will have mended by now), and two more. The two sorrels I should think are best."

"What about Mr. Anstruther's hunter?"

"His looks won't pay for his keep. He ain't the horse for this job. We aren't going fox hunting or hurdle jumping, and he'd play out before he got half way. The country breds are the only ones that could stay the distance."

"I think you underrate my horse's staying powers."

Anstruther had come in unobserved and heard the last remark, and though very calm in speech, he was very white and his eyes glittered angrily.

"Maybe, but I wouldn't have thought him any more good for this job than them things you was hauling out of your trunk for Miss Kitty to look at. All right in the shires, no doubt, horses and pink coat, and patent leather pumps, but not built for business," retorted Combe coldly.

Anstruther flushed and bit his lips.

To pass the time during the siege he had been overhauling his trunk, and at the moment when Jim came upon them he had been showing Kitty Clifford a red coat which he had brought with him at her request, for the fancy-dress ball at Victoria.

But he left Combe's remark unanswered. Instead of a direct reply he asked Rolt if, as no Indians were in sight, he did not think someone might get through to Soda Creek to send down the road for help.

"I was thinking of it, and mean to send some one as soon as it grows dark if the coast is still clear."

"Then, sir, if you will allow me, I can save stable room for Ruddy-gore. I will take myself to Soda Creek to-night."

"Nonsense, Anstruther. You could not ride half the distance. Your accident—"

"Oh, d—n my accident! I beg your pardon, Mr. Rolt, but I cannot be an invalid forever. I am perfectly able to ride if I cannot do anything else, and I would rather ride my horse to Soda Creek than abandon him."

For a moment Rolt's handsome face clouded. He was himself a hot-tempered man, but he had learned since his marriage to hold himself in check, beside which the antagonism between the two men, whilst it annoyed him, was intelligible enough.

"Very well, Anstruther. I'll consider what you say. We shall not be sending anyone for an hour or two. Let Mr. Anstruther's horse be brought in instead of mine, Jim," and with that he turned his back on the pair of them and went upstairs to the ladies.

What transpired there is not recorded, but whilst Anstruther was making his preparations, the fog began to close in around the ranch, Ruddy-gore was led into the dismantled dining-room, and two figures, those of old Toma and the elder Fairclough, rode quietly away, the one towards Soda Creek, and the other towards the Franklyn Ranch, to bring help, if possible.

"We are in a serious position, and they were the best men to send," was the explanation which Rolt vouchsafed, and thereafter, for twenty-four hours, Anstruther barely opened his mouth to anyone.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A sullen gloom settled upon the house and on the prairie outside the house. Jim and Anstruther barely spoke to one another, and both of them did their best to avoid Kitty, whilst the pines in the brule stood waist deep in the fog and long columns of mist rose from amongst the trees like vapors from a witch's cauldron.

But for two whole days no Indians appeared, and Rolt was beginning to hope that, when the help sent for arrived, there would be no work for the helpers to do.

Mrs. Rolt was the life of the party, but though she rallied the men on their silence and insisted upon songs in the drawing-room at night, and though Dr. Protheroe and her husband did all that they could to aid and abet her, her attempts were not crowned with success.

Every night, at least three different inmates of the ranch stole out to go over the defences. There was always some one missing from the group around the piano, trying the doors and re-arranging the barricades whilst no one was looking.

The blow fell in the third night.

The whole prairie land had been swallowed up in gloom in which no star showed, no wind moved, when Mrs. Rolt woke her husband with a gentle pressure of his arm.

"Don't make a noise, dear," she whispered, "but listen. I suppose it is only a rat."

"Not even that, Polly. It must have been your fancy. Go to sleep, little woman, and don't worry."

But at that moment a low knock sounded on the bed-room door. Instantly Rolt rose and opened it. Jim Combe was there with his rifle in his hand.

"Bring your gun along, Rolt. They are trying to fire the house."

In silence the two crept down the stairs, at the foot of which stood Anstruther, Old Al and Jack Fairclough, with their Winchesters in their hands.

The doctor was not there, but Jim led the way into a small room which jutted out from the face of the house, a room which they had laughingly christened the excrescence. Rolt had built it on as a conservatory for his wife, to connect with his own study. Both sides of it, as well as the top, being of glass, it was the weakest point in their defences, and in it, therefore, had been piled more than its share of furniture barricades. It formed the foot of a letter L, of which the main front of the house was the stem.

This room was in absolute darkness when the men entered it, but it seemed to Rolt that something stirred feebly in the corner of it.

Presently a voice, barely audible even to their straining ears, whispered:

"Are you there, Jim?"

Combe moved silently across towards the voice.

"Put that in your pocket for me, will you, old chap, until we've played this hand? Are you ready, now? Has each man picked his panel? Never mind the glass. Ready!"

There followed a faint scratching, and then a feeble blue flame appeared for a second, after which a great and lurid red light lit the whole conservatory, and flooded the front of the house, showing up with the utmost distinctness the piled furniture, the crowded and broken limbs of Mrs. Rolt's favorites, and the figure of the doctor behind a soup plate filled with some stuff to which he had set fire.

But the five men had no eyes for these things. In front of them, all along the face of the ranch house, they saw bundles of faggots piled, and amongst them a score of figures momentarily arrested in their work by the sudden illumination.

The Chilcotens had seen this Chinese fire the Christmas before, but it had been lighted then to amuse them; now it clung to their crouching figures, bathing them in its hideous glow, and betraying them to the rifles, which suddenly opened fire upon them.

When the roar of the Winchesters and the crashing of the glass had subsided, and the Chinese fire had died down to a dull red glow, which hung for a time on the face of the fog, there were a dozen of the Chilcotens who could not have crawled away to save themselves from the conflagration which they had come to kindle.

"Let's get out of this quick, for heaven's sake!" cried Combe, coughing from the fumes of the chemicals. "Lend a hand to clear away these faggots. We can't leave them there."

Following his example, they all scrambled out, and swiftly and in silence removed the faggots to a distance.

The fog shrouded them and no one molested them.

"Now get back, and don't pull up the barricade till I come."

As the others obeyed Jim went on his knees and laid a fire with more rapidity than he had ever laid one in his life.

Another man might have struck match after match and trusted to chance, but even then Jim was methodical, breaking the little twigs and laying them in closed packed bundles, so that when the small star of light appeared it grew steadily, and still the watchers could see Jim feeding his fire and making sure that the flames had made good their hold.

Then a shot was fired from the fog, the faggots rattled and flew in all directions, and Combe came running, almost on his hands and knees, to the barricade. But the fire had caught hold, and as soon as the men in the excrescence replaced the furniture and made good the gaps, great tongues of flame roared as they climbed upwards.

"We can't help that. They can see to shoot now as well as we can, but they won't come close whilst we have that light. Tell the women to keep away from the windows, and let each man watch from behind something solid. Don't spare the cartridges. Al?"

"I'm here."

"Get round to the back and watch out there. I guess you can see in the dark better than most. Where's the doctor?"

No one answered.

"Doc! Ho! Doc!" Jim cried, but there was no reply.

"Did any of you see him outside? We haven't left him out, have we?"

"He wasn't outside. Perhaps he knew enough to keep in out of the rain," sneered Fairclough, who detested the doctor, whose butt he had always been.

"He knows a good deal now, 'mongst other things, what a blanked fool you are! Poor old chap!"

There was a curious choking sound in Jim's savage voice, as he groped about in the dark and turned something over on the floor.

"Thank you, Anstruther. Will you take his feet? Here, Rolt, strike a light. We've got to chance their shooting."

Rolt struck one, and in the short gleam of it the others saw Jim and Anstruther lift the body from the floor and put it upon the table where the red fire had been.

"That's the first to go," muttered Jim. "Always wanted the lead and would have it. Shot through the head from behind. Some of the devils must have been behind when he lit his fire."

"I heard no shot."

"Not likely to with the noise we were making. What's wrong with your neck, Anstruther? Cut it?"

"Just touched, I fancy. I got it when they hit him. Shall we take him into the house?"

"Better not, and better say nothing about it to them upstairs. We can't do any more for him now, Boss," and Jim drew a large worked table-cover over the dead man's face and turned to see that the barricades were as strong as they could be made.

When he was at his post again he drew from his pocket that which the doctor had given him. It was a common playing-card and on it was written in pencil a London address. Beneath this the doctor had written in big letters which wandered uncertainly over the blank space: "So long, Jim. See you again some day."

"So he knew it was coming, did he?" mused Jim, "and he took it all back at the last, all his tall talk about science and annihilation of matter. Well, I guess the Handicapper knew the Doc's handicap, and will be the best judge of his running."

And then, as he looked out in the reddened gloom, whilst his eyes tried to pierce through the fog, his mind tried to peer into that Next Room where the doctor now was, and if he failed to place the doctor, he at least managed to place himself. He saw the triviality of the things which had so embittered him for the last few days, and even confessed to himself that when it came to fighting, his rival was not much of a muff after all. If that which had made the scratch on Anstruther's neck had been an inch or two to the left Jim Combe felt that his memory of the last few days would have been a load for him to carry all the rest of his life. But the first grey light of the morning brought Jim back from the Unknown to the present with a shock. As the mists rolled away the temporary absence of the Indians was explained. They

LIVED LONG YEARS AFTER AWFUL FALL

Parachute Jumper Dies in His Bed Out West, Having Survived a Fall of Half a Mile.

The man who fell 3,000 feet from a balloon lived seventeen years longer than anyone but himself said he would. When crushed and paralyzed and despaired of by surgeons, he insisted that he would survive to go up again, and he did. The great fall occurred in Venezuela in 1895. Seventeen years later, the man died in Edmonton, Alta., after an illness of several months. He was Chares Wolcott, professional aeronaut. There is no record of another experience like his.

Wolcott was the son of a Louisiana planter, who lost everything in the Civil War. The boy joined a circus flated. Wolcott hopped on the trapese performer. He was with Sells Brothers and the original Adam Forepaugh show. In 1882, when Wolcott was eighteen years old, the balloonist and parachute jumper of the circus fell and was killed. The boy succeeded him and made ascensions in this country until in the fall of 1895, he went to Venezuela to see what the South Americans thought of aeronautics.

On Oct. 28 he was in Ville de Cura with the first balloon ever seen in that region. Thousands of natives were assembled, and Wolcott had no assistant to keep them back. While he was busy filling the bag with hot air the Venezuelans were fingering the ropes and parachute and trampling them in the mud.

Finally the swaying balloon was in he could without checking his descent, pese and up he went. He always said afterward that he arose between 3,000 and 3,500 feet before cutting loose the parachute. At any rate the parachute did not open. The mud trampled into it had fastened the ropes as if with cement. The aeronaut, shooting straight downward, kept his head and tugged at the ropes in an attempt to shake them free. Having done all he he could without checking his descent, he made his body ready for what he knew was coming. He remembered that his best chance of avoiding mortal injury, if such a thing could be, was to hit the ground feet first, so he held his legs rigidly straight with toes pointed downward.

Within 200 feet of the earth the parachute opened, but it was gong so fa that the air split its covering in half dozen places. Wolcott hit the groun in the middle of a level field. The surgical inventory taken many days lat disclosed that several bones in eac foot were broken; that both ankle both knees and both hips were dislocated; that the pelvis and left arm were fractured; that the ribs on he left side were torn from the spine; that the lower vertebrae were dislocated and slightly cracked, and that there was pressure on the spinal cord.

Wolcott, who was conscious all the time, was carried to a hut and left alone suffering intensely. He sent away the only doctor in the place because the doctor said the only thing to do was to bleed him. He stayed in the hut all night, keeping himself awake by smoking cigarettes, for he believed that he would die if he once became unconscious.

The next morning Wolcott started for the railway station at Caguo on a stretcher, guarded by twenty soldiers and he finally reached the hospital at Caracas.

For three days thereafter he slept under an anaesthetic. He was paralyzed from the waist down. The surgeons told him he would die, but they gave him the best of treatment. Every fracture and dislocation was reduced except that of the right hip joint. In a few months he was well enough, though still helpless, to sail for New York. There he entered St. Luke's Hospital. Gradually he regained the use of his legs and arms, though his right hip remained dislocated and his spine bent. In spite of what he had come through, he was making contracts for parachute jumps within a year of the time he fell.

HE'S CALLED TOM

Finance Minister's First Name Not Familiar to Many

Hon. W. T. White was not elected in Leeds; at least, Wesley Thomas White was not. This amusing and somewhat interesting mistake has come to light.

Mr. White was christened Wesley Thomas. Somehow, his name on the electoral lists of Leeds appeared as William Thomas, and the minister was gazetted as William Thomas, and his name is recorded as such in the parliamentary guide. Now it has been discovered that the name is Wesley not William.

Mr. White was the first to discover the curious mistake.

Jabot fronts that fall far below the waist are a novel feature of a blouse much worn.

ELECTRIC CURRENT TO NURTURE PLANTS

Problem Which is Also Being Worked Out in Canadian Electrical Development

If electric current can stimulate and strengthen the vitality of the human body, why should it not nourish and nurture plant life with equal success. This is the question William Stahl, an Evanston, Ill., electric gardener, asked—and answered by electrifying his little farm and it is also a question which is being worked out in connection with the development of Hydro-electric power throughout Canada. He raised a series of crops of beans, tomatoes, beets, potatoes, corn, melons and other garden fruit, each and every one of which came to maturity several weeks ahead of those on his neighbors' farms. He even planted a second crop late in the summer and brought it to a successful harvest after the frost had killed off nearly everything else on the surrounding farms. Moreover, the vegetables grown on the Stahl farm were of a size and flavor that no neighboring farmer equaled. His electrical farm does not differ in appearance from other farms save in the poles set in the fields which might be mistaken for climbing poles for vines were it not for their unusual height and the wires connecting them. There is also a network of wires running underground, these being placed at a depth of about a foot and a half beneath the surface, and from 10 to 20 feet apart, while the overhead wires are strung about a foot apart. It is along these wires that morning and evening the electrical current is turned on from the main switchboard energizing the soil and making it especially productive. The power is supplied by the city electric lighting plant at from $2.50 to $4 per acre for the crop season. The electrical treatment is started just when the plants begin to come out of the ground, and is continued until the crops are about ready to be harvested. The original cost of the instalation of the electrical machinery is not excessive, and the cost of the current is more than offset by the saving on the cost of manual labor for while the farm must be plowed and otherwise tended in the ordinary way, the gross amount of time expended on it is considerably less than that given to the ordinary farm because of the speedier growth and harvesting of the crops.

WOMEN FARMERS

Dairy farming as a profession for women and an aid to the solution of the problem of agricultural depression was advocated by Mrs. Gardiner, of Cheltenham, England, at the annual meeting of the Women's Agricultural and Horticultural International Union.

Mrs. Gardiner maintained that dairy farming offorded a good opening for women, and that in itself was sufficient excuse for bringing the matter forward. But it might also help to solve two problems, the problem of agricultural depression which was so trying all over Great Britain, and the problem of employment for women. There was any amount of scope for women who were trained as dairy farmers, and could get the capital to start them, and they would make a much better living at it than in many of the professions women now entered. The teaching profession, for instance, was frightfully overcrowded, and likely to become more overcrowded still. There was a much greater demand for properly produced milk than there used to be, and certainly, in the case of women, unless they were going to produce the best sort of milk on the most up-to-date lines, they might as well not start dairy farming at all. Capital was essential, but if the working woman was inclined to work, and was backed up by somebody with capital, she had no doubt that commercially dairy farming for women could be made to succeed.

TREATED FOR NAUGHTINESS

A Correspondent Tells of Experiments Made in Japan

Writing to the "Times" recently on the subject of sulkiness, a correspondent refers to the possibility of treating children medicinally for naughtiness. "This," she says, "is actually done in Japan. I had charge of some Japanese children, and if they proved unamenable to discipline, or gave way to prolonged fits of naughtiness, they were taken away for a day or two and invariably came back to me cheerful and good-tempered. On inquiry I found they had been massaged either once or twice, and that it was a very generally practised remedy, all naughtiness being held to proceed from disordered stomach."

Many Reasons Why Liquid Cough Mixtures Can't Cure Bronchitis

But the Healing [illegible] ance of Catarrhozone, Which Are Breathed to the Further Recesses of the Bronchial Tubes, Bring Quick Relief and Sure Cure.

Every sufferer from coughs, colds, bronchitis and all throat and chest ailments needs a soothing, healing, medicine which goes direct to the breathing organs in the chest and lungs attacks the trouble at its source disperses the germs of disease, and cures the ailments thoroughly. And this medicine is "Catarrhozone."

The germ-killing balsamic vapor mixes with the breath, descends through the throat, down the bronchial tubes, and finally reaches th deepest air cells in the lungs. All parts are soothed with rich, pure medicinal essences, whereas with a syrup the affected parts could not be reached, and harm would result through benumbing the stomach with drugs.

"I have been a chronic sufferer from catarrh in the nose and throat for over eight years. I think I have spent four hundred dollars trying to get relief. I have spent but six dollars on Catarrhozone, and have been completely cured, and in fact have been welll or some time. Catarrhozone is the only medicine I have been able to find that would not only give temporary relief but will always cure permanently.. Yours sincerely, (Signed) WILLIAM HAGAN, Brockville, Ont.

For absolutely permanent cure use Catarrhozone. Two months' outfit costs $1.00 smaller size, 50c. at all storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y. and Kingston, Canada.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

ENGLISH BEAUTY TELLS COMPLEXION SECRETS

("Elsie" in American Home.)

Through a fortunate meeting with an English lady, noted lor her dazzling complexion, I recently learned the full meaning of that old adage, "Beauty is skin deep." She taught me how to remove my muddy skin, revealing the young and beautiful skin underneath. The process is so simple, harmless and inexpensive. I'm sure you'll be glad to know about it. Just get an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax at any drug store and apply nightly, like cold cream, for a week or so. Every morning in washing off the wax, tiny particles of worn-out cuticle come off, to. The action is so gentle and gradual, there's no discomfort. It's a wonderful treatment, as it not only peels off the faded or discolored skin, but all of its defects, as chaps, roughness, freckles, pimples, blotches, blackheads.

I am indebted to the same lady for a remarkable wrinkle-removing formula. One ounce powdered saxolite is dissolved in a half-pint witch hazel. Used as a face, this is so effective that just one application causes the finer lines to disappear, and soon even the deepest ones go.

Sportsmanship

Never pitch a ball to hit the batter
Never hit a blow below the line,
Never spike another man at cricket
And profit by this little rhyme of mine.

Never gouge a player in a mass-play
Never "soldier" when bow oar in a boat,
Never duck a man who's not a swimmer,
Never spit to wind'ard when afloat

Never chew the weed unless a-hunting
Never fail to show an anchor light
Never shoot a bird unless it's flying
Never cinch a saddle up too tight

Never fail to toot your horns at crossings,
Never say a good ball is a fault,
Never ride a nag until it's windblown,
Never try to run away, but "halt."

Never speak when silence should be golden,
Never silent be when time to speak
Never hold a grudge against a neighbor,
Never pit the strong against the weak.

Never spurn a servant or inferior,
Never fear a better man or king
Never be anything but gracious,
Never disregard the little thing.

Never, sir, decline to do your duty
Never fail to know where duty li
Never wear a manner that's a misnt
Never, sir, refuse to sacrifice.

And if a virile nation names you sportsman,
Why—glorify her honor and her name,
And sally forth to meet the party chosen,
For that's the proper way to win the game.

—Richard J. Williams, jun., in The Philadelphia Ledger.

Man Against Horse

A letter to a Toronto newspaper from a correspondent who gives no dates or details, says that the assumption that a horse could not equal a man's journey of 150 miles in twenty-four hours and recuperate from the effort is incorrect. The writer says he knew a thoroughbred mare, raised by Mr. Robert Davies of Thorncliffe, and sold as a cull, which went 128 miles in less than twenty-four hours. "She trotted the last mile," he adds, "as freely as the first, and I believe could have made the other twenty-five miles in the balance of the time. She did this drawing a heavy buggy on muddy roads, and showed no ill effects."

MONROE DOCTRINE THROWN OVER FOR PEACE WITH JAPANESE

Washington Story Says Britain, France and Germany Will Restore Order in Mexico

Washington, July 19.—Vitally alarmed by the simultaneous crisis in Mexico and the menace of Japan, President Wilson has practically abandoned the Monroe doctrine. He has begged Great Britain to pacify her oriental ally, and as the price of this service Great Britain, Germany and France may go into Mexico, protect their citizens' lives and property and collect debts and claims long overdue.

This information was given to-day by a close personal and political friend of President Wilson, wha at the same time is one of the most powerful and best informed members of the United States Senate.

The bargain permits European navies to threaten Mexican ports, European armies to land on the soil of the Western continent—but relieves President Wilson and his secretary of state from the dilemma—recognition of the Huerta as President or intervention in Mexico by the United States.

Britain's Note.

When Secretary Bryan a day ior two ago sent a reply drawn by John Bassett Moore to Japan, there was despatched simultaneously a note from Great Britain, strongly urging Japan to rest content with the reply. So Japan was eliminated as an element of danger. It remained for President Wilson to vindicate by a diplomatic subterfuge, his policy of "peace at any price" to keep the army on the American side of the Rio Grande, to keep the navy rocking in Mexican waters like toy ships on a ruffled pond.

No further developments in the Mexican situation are expected until the arrival of Ambassador Wilson, who left Vera Cruz yesterday afternoon for Havana. The ambassador will go to Key West from there and thence to Washington by train.

Mr. James Bogue, of Peterborough, is the contractor.

YANKEE MARINES SACK AND BURN RED FLAG HIVE, SEATTLE

They Parade Streets Denouncing the Industrial Workers of the World While Police Looks on---S. A. Barracks Too

Seattle, Wash., July 19.—While the officers of the Pacific Fleet Reserve of the United States Navy were dancing at the army and navy ball in the state armory late last night and early to-day, several hundreds of the sailors and marines were marching through the streets of the city denouncing the Industrial Workers of the World, and the red flag, sacking and burning socialist and industrial workers' headquarters, and in their excitement demolished a Salvation Army meeting room before learning that they had mistaken the place.

The city headquarters of the moderate socialists and the radical socialists were sacked, and the books and furniture carried into the streets and burned. A socialists' newstand on the principal street corner of the city was destroyed and the big meeting room of the Industrial Workers of the World in the other part of the city was stripped of its belongings, which were thrown from a second storey window and burned in the street.

No Resistance.

The police offered no resistance to the rioters. Some of the officers said that all the force was busy handling crowds attending the golden potlach festivities and no reserves were available to cope with the rioters. The actual destruction of property was carried on by uniformed men, the citizens made up most of the mob. The damage is estimated at $6,000.

THE WOLF OF WALL STREET AN INTERESTING PERSONAGE

David Lamar, Who Has Evaded the Traps Set for Him by The Cleverest Nimrods of Financial New York, Reveals His Secret

New York, July 19.—The Armageddon failed to arrive last fall as predicted by Col. Roosevelt, we seem to have reached that point in the world's history, forecasted by the author of the Apocalypse "when all things shall be revealed."

More secrets of finance and politics are being uncovered to-day than in the era of "muckraking" started by the confessions of Thomas W. Lawson, and not the least interesting of these disclosures are those concerning the activities of David Lamar, the "wolf" of Wall street, as The Evening Post Long ago nominated him; a wolf whose sharp teeth even the great Steel Corporation has felt, a wolf whose wits are so keen that for ten years he has evaded the traps set for him by the cleverest Nimrods in Wall street.

Widespread Influence.

No bear raid has occurred in recent times without the suspicion of complicity being cast on David Lamar. His very name has scared speculators into nervous prostration and so great has been the fear of his influence that Martin W. Littleton in 1911 was forced to address Congress in refutation of the charge that David Lamar had instigated the Stanley investigation of the Steel Trust and that he controlled the Stanley Committee. He was credited with being behind the Peter Power suit to prevent the Northern Pacific-Great Northern merger, a suit which forced J. P. Morgan onto the witness stand for the first time in his life, as well as the Aspinwall Hodge action to enjoin the Steel Corporation from cancelling its preferred stock and issuing bonds in its place. Mr. Lamar himself declared to the senate committee that he drew up the Stanley resolution for investigation of the Steel Trust. "Representative Stanley" he said, "didn't even know of the resolution until it was handed to him."

SKIRT SLIT; FINE $25; RICHMOND NOT NICE

Girl Argues Sale By Store Permitted Her to Wear Gown Slashed To Knee.

Richmond, Va., July 19.—Blossom Browning paid a $25 fine in Judge Crutchfield's court here to-day for wearing a slit skirt, and declared she intended to go to New York at once, "where people are not prudish." She was charged with indecent exposure.

The skirt, slit knee-high, and held by the police as evidence, was restored to Miss Browning on her promise to sew up the slash or not to appear again in the streets of Richmond without a petticoat.

Miss Browning's lawyer argued that the sale of the skirt by a licensed department store permitted to wear it. Judge Crutchfield replied that a city license for the sale of firearms did not authorize murder.

The justice, after an inspection of the offending skirt, blushing fined the defendant, who paid with the retort that "Richmond was a most illiberal city." Justice Crutchfield's court was packed with the most select audience it had held.

MR. W. J. OKE MAY SUE COUNCIL MONAGHAN

On Saturday, Mr. W. J. Oke was hors de combat, or in English, about "all in." His delicate state of health was due to a serious accident sustained on Friday night in the township of Monaghan. It seems that as the well known merchant was wheeling towards Crawford's Grove about 11 p.m., he saw on the road what he took to be the shadows of two or three trees. The shadows, however, proved to be very material. They were the trunks of several trees, or logs, lying across the roadway. Thinking them shadows, Mr. Oke sped his bike along. Hey, presto! and Mr. Oke flew over the handle bars, over the logs. He alighted on the trees on his abdomen and was severely injured. He also sustained injuries to his head. The logs had been left on the road, it is said, for road repairs, without any warning lamps present.

It is understood that Mr. Oke will enter an action for damages against the township.

HEART OF CANADA SOUND ON NAVY

Hon. W. T. White Says This Country Can be Relied on to Do Her Duty

London, July 19.—"The heart of Canada is sound on the naval question, and she can confidently be relied upon to do her duty, both to herself and the Empire," said Hon. W. T. White, minister of finance of Canada, who has just returned to London.

He declined to discuss the naval policy of the government, but gave the assurances that the Canadian people were most desirous of bearing their share in providing for the defence of the Empire, and would cheerfully and loyally approve whatever outlay might be necessary to that end. The two great political parties [illegible] most unhappily differed radically as to the method of giving aid, and in consequence action had been delayed. "It is, however, only delayed," he observed emphatically.

SKULL BROKEN IN DRUNKEN BRAWL

Medicine Hat, Alta., July 19.—Andrean Chosik, a Galician, who was found lying on the street early yesterday morning in an unconscious condition, as the result of a drunken brawl, is dying. The inner shell of the skull is badly broken and attending physicians have but faint hopes for his recovery. He was operated on yesterday.

In the meantime five Galicians are under arrest and are being held by the police awaiting the outcome of Chosik's injuries.

THE WEATHER.

To-day—Fair and warm, with few showers in some localities.

RUSHING WORK ON HALIFAX TERMINALS

Government Loses no Time in Letting First Contracts for Developement of Atlantic Port

(Special to The Times.)

Ottawa, July 19.—The government is losing no time in pushing ahead the work on Halifax Harbor and the Intercolonial terminals at the Nova Scotia capital which will make one of the finest ports on the continent. Contracts for the first work have been awarded by the government. The first work consists of the construction of a cut-off of five miles from Rockingham on the I.C.R. to the new ocean terminals in the south of the city.

The contract price is a million and a half and the successful tenderers are the Cooke Construction Co. of Sudbury and A. B. Wheaton of Amherst, N.S. There will be a tremendous amount of excavation necessary and all the dirt and rock will be used on the work on the new pier.

FREIGHT CAR IN BEDROOM OF SLEEPING GIRL

opples Down Embankment, Crashes Through House, Stops at Foot of Bed.

Chicago, Ill., July 19.—Miss Clara Marsske had a narrow escape from death or serious injury today when she was awakened by a tremendous racket to see a freight car crashing through the house toward her bedroom. The car stopped directly in front of the young woman's bed.

With several other freight cars the intruder had broken from a train and plunged down an embankment in front of the Marsske home.

LOCAL CURE FOR INGROWING NAIL

Orillia Packet: The Peterborough and Millbrook districts have been much exercised of late over the doings of a certain "lady doctor," who professes to cure all diseases, and is doing as rushing a business as the average brass jewellery fakir on the corner of Mississaga and Peter-sts., Orillia. A few days ago a man who applied for advice and treatment, paid a dollar for instructions to go home and put a break-and-milk poultice on the back of the neck. His complaint was an in-growing tow nail!

SPENCE SWINGS HAMMER HITS AT NORFOLK CRITIC

Donly Couldn't Win After Two Tries, But Col. Atkinson Came Through Handsomely--Alliance is a Fake Says W. H. Fairbairn in Letter

Toronto, July 19.—The outspoken criticism of N. W. Rowell, K.C., and the Dominion Alliance, published by Hal B. Donly, Liberal candidate in Norfolk in the 1908 federal election, in his paper, The Simcoe Reformer, and reprinted in The World Saturday morning, was variously commented on yesterday, according to the bias of the parties interviewed. Rev. Ben H. Spence, secretary Dominion Alliance, comes back at Donly with the statement that he has twice failed to win a seat while the Liberal candidate in North Norfolk, Col. Atkinson, a temperance man, held his seat by a substantial majority. And along comes W. H. Fairbairn, who describes the Dominion Alliance as "the biggest fake on the continent."

There is sure to be a merry war between the temperance and anti-banish-the-bar Liberals.

Mr. Speace Replies.

Rev. Ben. H. Spence, secretary Dominion Alliance, replying to Mr. Donly, said Saturday:

"If I understand the leaders of the Liberal party, and especially of Mr. Rowell, they were seeking rather to know and do what was right rather than to adopt a catch policy that would gain votes.

"It is [illegible] important for a man or party to be right than successful. Mr. Donly apparently takes a low, mean view of politics. His motto seems to be 'win, principle be hanged.'"

KILLED BY FRIEND AT REVOLVER PRACTICE

North Hartley, Que., July 19.—That the shooting last night of Wilfrid Parker, son of Judge Charles W. Parker, of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, was accidental, and that there was no necessity for an inquest, was the opinion of Dr. Cleaver, the coroner, this morning.

Parker, who was staying et his father's summer home here, was shot by a revolver in the hands of John Lincoln, a friend, whose home is in Boston. Lincoln was practising with the revolver, when it jammed. In trying to fix it he pulled the trigger while the weapon was pointed at Parker, a bullet entering his abdomen, death resulting in a few minutes.

AN AMERICAN MEDICO IS VICTIM TO FRIEDMAN CURE

Lancet Reports Case of Subject Who Developed Bacilli at Point of Injection

London, July 19.—The current issue of the London Lancet, the leading authority on medical subjects, contains an editorial on Friedmann's tuberculosis treatment with special reference to a recent meeting of the Berlin Medical society, at which specimens were shown.

The subject was an American medical man who was teken to a hospital where he received an injection of Friedmann's serum, three weeks ago. For a time he improved, but died later. At the place of injection were found tuberculosis bacilli shorter and thicker than the human bacilli.

"The question is," says The Lancet, "whether the tuberculosis at the place of injection must be regarded as a direct sequel to the injection or only as a symptom of the general tuberculosis.

"Primary tuberculosis of the muscles is extremely rare and it is significant that tuberculosis should have developed at the spot where an alleged anti-tuberculosis remedy had been deposited."

EVERYBODY HITTING SECRETARY BRYAN ON LECTURE TOUR

Foreign Papers Discuss Personal Habits of Prime Minister and His State Banquets

Washington, July 19.—The event of the week has been the terrific assault from so many quarters upon Hon. William J. Bryan, secretary of state. The blows have rained in from all quarters, even foreign newspapers discussing the personal habits of the secretary of state, and lecturing his wife on what she should give her guests for dinner. The United States papers, with a different constituency, could not afford to denounce a public official as too zealous for temperance, and they, therefore, seized upon the lecture tour as the scourge with which to lash Mr. Bryan.

More than one man entering the cabinet in the past has stipulated that he should be allowed to devote a part of his time to his private business. Thus, when William M. Evarts, of New York, became secretary of state, he accepted the place with the understanding that he should be allowed to argue a number of important cases in which he had been retained some time before, and which were not yet finally disposed of. This was well known at the time and attracted no comment or attention. Probably few busy men have entered the government of any country, especially if they were entering public life for the first time, without stipulating for some such concession as was granted in the case of Mr. Evarts. True, Mr. Bryan did not help his case by stating that he could not live on $12,000 a year. The obvious reply to that defence was that Mr. Bryan should resign. The liklihood is that he will fill his engagements for the present Chautauqua meetings, and then bow to public opinion and speak no more on the lecture platform while acting as secretary of state.

NEWSPAPER PAYS HEAVY DAMAGES IN LIBEL ACTION

Custodian of the Dublin Royal Jewels Awarded Twenty-Five Thousand Dollars

London, July 19.—The sum of $25,000 was awarded as damages to Sir Arthur Edward Vicars in Mr. Justice Darling's Court recently for a libel published in regard to him and the missing Dublin Crown jewels in the weekly paper, The London Mail.

The defendants did not persist in a plea of justification originally filed and a remarkable story was told by Mr. J. H. Campbell, K.C., in opening the case for Sir Arthur Vicars.

Sir Arthur, said counsel, held the important position of Ulster King-at-Arms from January, 1893, until February, 1908, and had charge of the Crown Jewels apertaining to the order of St. Patrick. In July, 1907, the jewels were stolen, and the mystery had never been cleared up. In October his services were dispensed with, and although he appealed strongly for a judicial inquiry it was refused. A commissision was held and reported that he had been negligent.

Startling Allegations.

The libel in the London Mail, counsel continued, had reference to the loss of the jewels, and was published on November 23, 1912, as follows:

"What happened in Dublin Castle the night before the Crown jewels were stolen? And why the lady who carried out such an elaborate scheme of revenge against Sir Arthur Vicars was allowed to go unpunished? Further, what led Sir Arthur Vicars to shield this lady through thick and thin at the cost of this post and his honor, and what return the lady made him for this sacrifice? And why those officials all occupying the highest posts in the Irish administration remained mute through the whole affair, allowed the word "robbery" to be bruited about, and yet all the time knew that the jewels were never off the castle precincts?

"And, as a last query that wants a good deal of explaining, why did Lord and Lady Aberdeen display such extraordinary and inhuman vindictiveness against Sir Arthur Vicars when their son Lord Haddo did all he could to vindicate the accused man? . . . Will anyone ever have the courage to tell the whole truth about this wretched business, revolving, as it does, round love, jealousy and a culminating tragedy of fiendish revenge?"

THE EVENT OF THE SEASON.

One of the most enjoyable events of the season is the Printers' picnic. This annual event is booked for Aug. 2nd, and the steamer Stoney Lake will carry the large crowd to Victoria Park and Jubilee Point. Keep this date open!

BASEBALL

The lowly Petes were just a shade higher in their play than Brantford on Saturday. They went to the obstructionists right and when the end of the second game arrived Brantford hadn't a leg to stand on—trimmed to a finish. The Petes, after their holiday came back better than ever and took both games from hem by the scores of 8—4 and 2—1. The boys played grand ball to a large crowd of fans, every man working to his limit.

MERCANTILE LEAGUE.

At the Brinton Park, the Typos defeated the Brintons by a score of 7—10.

At Riverside Park, the M.A.P. defeated the Quakers.

The game between the Machine shop and the Draughting Room, was a hot one up till the sixth innings, when the Machine Shop led the Draughters by 6 runs. Then it was when Flaherty blew up and was replaced by Callahan—too late, the damage was done. The Draughters, just as they did in all other games did some smiting and run after run was scored until the figures on the board at the end of the garden looked like 15—10 in favor of the Draughting room.

NUGENT'S SARSAPARILLA—PRICE FOR large bottle, 100 full doses, 75c. and well worth it, too. It's better to take no medicine at all than to depend upon cheap concoctions that are compounded to sell at low price and a big profit just because there is a large demand for certain remedies at certain seasons of the year. There are so-called Sarsaparillas offered to us to sell to our customers at 75c a bottle that would bring us a larger profit than Nugent's Sarsaparilla sold at 75c. Nugent's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, arouses the torpid liver, drives out all impurities, cleanses and tones up the system, and helps Nature throw off the dullness that comes from indoor life of winter. It arouses energy, brightens the eye, clears the brain, gives lightness to the movements. Nugent's Sarsaparilla is not the only thing you will find in this drug store, we make a specialty of Nugent's Remedies. Nugent Drug Co., 386 George St., directly opposite Cressman's store.

POTATO PARER

Here Is One That Will Fit Any Knife

There are many economical housekeepers who weep at the losses they suffer through the improper paring of vegetables and yet insist that the patent parers are not nearly so good for the purpose as the old fashioned knife. Here is a way to fix an ordinary knife so that it becomes a potato parer of the highest order. Secure a length of steel wire and coil its ends until it makes a length about 1 inch shorter than the blade of an ordinary table knife. When finished you will have a hard straight piece of wire connecting two coils. Push the blade of the knife between the coils near the straight piece and you have a parer. If you care to leave an end of the wire out and can shape it to a point, you also have a handy tool for removing the eyes from potatoes with little loss.

Something About Ears.

The thin, angular ear is said to denote bad temper and cruelty.

Small and thin ears usually denote delicacy and refinement.

As age increases the ear becomes more angular and marked.

People with musical tastes generally have large and prominent ears.

Abnormally large, thick ears are associated with a sensual and coarse nature.

Great philosophers and statesmen have been noticed to have large and sloping ears.

Curious Epitaphs.

Here lies Thomas Williams, no wonder he's dead,
For the wheels of the wagon went over his head.

Beneath this stone our baby lies,
He neither cries nor hollers;
He lived just one-and-twenty days,
And cost us forty dollars.

Deep in this bed there lies the clay
Of Arabella Young,
Who on the 23rd of May
Began to hold her tongue!

MAPLE SUGAR INDUSTRY

Care in the Process of Manufacture Necessary for Good Results.

From the time the earliest explorers discovered Indians making sugar from the maple tree until the present day the production of maple sugar has been an important industry in Canada and the United States. These two countries are the only ones in which the industry flourishes. In a Farmers' Bulletin issued by the United States Government it is stated that maple sugar and maple syrup are not now produced in such quantities as formerly. "But," the Bulletin goes on to say, "within the last six or seven years there has been a renewed tendency towards the production of a better grade of maple products.

"Maple syrup or maple sugar prepared by the best methods is a light-colored, pleasant-tasting product. Contrary characteristics are the result of uncleanly methods and possibly sour sap in 99 cases out of a hundred, and were manufacturers to take greater care in their methods their results would show improvements. This better grade may not appeal to many people who have been accustomed to the dark, stronger grades."

In relation to the present growth of the sugar maple the bulletin states:—

"Within its wide range the sugar maple appears as a predominant tree only in the New England States, New York, Southern Canada, Northern and Western Pennsylvania, and in parts of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. In the southern Appalachians it occurs in scattered bodies where climate conditions are similar to those of the North. In the extreme northern part of New York State and the adjacent district of Quebec the forest growth is often almost pure maple, and even considerably further south, where beech and birch become associate trees, the sugar maple holds its own as the dominant species. In Northern Pennsylvania, at an altitude of over 1,000 feet, the mixture is much the same as it is in New York. In Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois a similar condition is found, but as the hilly country disappears the maple retreats to the richer and damper soils, leaving great areas to the oaks and chestnuts."

What's the Use?

A man who saw how the farmers were cheated
Showed them the game and how they could beat it;
Some of them laughed and others looked grim,
But all asked, "What is there in it for him?"

At last he got sick of his foolish campaign,
Since no one would act there was nothing to gain;
Then the farmers all wakened and started to scoff.
"Just what we expected! They've bought him off!"

And the man who had tried to fight their fight,
To stop the cheating and get things right,
Laughed and said as he turned to his plow:
"You can't help a farmer anyhow!"

FENIAN RAID GRANTS

Applications for Fenian raid grants continued to pour into the militia department at Ottawa, and indicate a misapprehension of the qualifications necessary to secure the $100. Included in the thousands who are laying claim to the money are many in the lower provinces where simply the proclamation was read without the troops going to the front. It is estimated there will be about 20,000 claimants. The number actually on service was around 10,000, and a third of them are dead.

TESTS OF COURAGE

The custom of courage tests at initiations originated away back in the Dark Ages when the average secret society had for its main purpose the extinction of some particular individual, or set of individuals. It put the personal courage of every candidate to the test. It was necessary that he be courageous, that he be capable of withstanding everything from the thumbscrews to the gallows. The revelation of a society's secrets a few hundred years ago would have meant death to every member of the organisation. Brave men were essential. "Riding the goat" is nothing more or less than a test of courage. To the spectators, it is funny; to the candidate, serious. The spectators know the goat isn't apt to create any wide havoc; the candidate does not. He has only external evidence by which to judge. The goat may stumble sometimes—in fact, it does. Only in the more ritualistic orders does "goat-riding" in all its various forms still retain a certain solemnity of purpose. The idea is to test the candidate's confidence in his fellow-members. He is assured, first of all that no harm will come to him. Then he is plunged into the midst of seeming danger. He is allowed to touch a huge steel shield, with sharp spikes projecting from it at a hundred points. The shield is laid on the floor. The candidate is led to a platform six feet above it, and told to jump down—on the shield. He does. The shield proves to be rubber. All is well. The candidate has proved his faith in his fellows. Again—The candidate is bound hand and foot. A hot iron is brandished in front of him. He is informed that it is to be stamped on his back. He feels it. He smells burning flesh. He protests, perhaps—and is shown a chunk of ice, together with a piece of burned beefsteak.

DROP INDIAN NAMES

English and Scotch Cognomens Used By Manitoba Red Men.

Mr. J. K. L. Ross, who went on a hunting expedition into the wilds some 150 miles north of Winnipeg, Manitoba, says that the Indians of the Fisher River reserve are those who were removed north from Selkirk some twelve or thirteen years ago, and they appear to be doing very well, fishing and farming. Most of them, although they appear to be full-blooded, have English and Scotch names; some of them explaining that they had been adopted into families of Old Country origin.

For instance, Mr. Ross met a man at the Fisher River mission named Andrew Macpherson, who lives in a house, teaches school, and is an Anglican by religious faith. Two others, whose respective names were Robert Rose and Jacob Thomas, appeared to be about as nearly full-blooded as could be expected.

KAISER HARD TO PHOTOGRAPH

Rejects Pictures Unless They Portray a Fierce Look

The reason why snapshot portraits of the Kaiser differ so materially from the elaborate photographs that receive the royal imprimatur has been disclosed. The Kaiser is the hardest man in the world to please with a photograph.

A photographer much visited by his Majesty, who takes him every year, says that at least a dozen negatives have to be made each time, and with the resultant prints brought to the Kaiser, who rejects all save those that present the well-known fierce look.

The negatives have to be smashed in his presence. On one occasion only did his Majesty choose a copy of his photograph bearing a suggestion of a smile, an enlargement of which he ordered for his mother.

SOME POULTRY HINTS

Because some people advocate well ventilated poultry houses, do not allow the air to enter in such a way as to cause a draft. Have all the openings in the south side of the house and covered with cloth on days when wind or storm would blow in.

A well-known poultry man says he has found by experimenting that space covered with cloth does not make the house any colder at night than the same space covered by glass, and the cloth gives good ventilation.

An unsuspecting draft of cold air striking the fowls at night while on the roosts is responsible for many a case of cold and croup.

Milk given to fowls is well adapted to egg production. It may be used for drinking purposes, or used in place of water to mix with the ashes.

Pelting a Motorist

For throwing a stone through the glass screen of a motor-car and injuring two of the occupants, Edith Willis, a middle-aged woman, was sentenced at Bromley to six weeks' hard labor. Miss Dot Laird, the owner of the car, was cut on the lip by broken glass and a companion's ear was cut. Willis, it was stated, said that some motorists had laughed at her; "I will have my revenge," she added.

"What Peterboro needs is a new City Hall," remarked a citizen to The Times the other day. That has been the need of the town for a long time, and some years ago a movement to secure one started off with the usual speeches, resolutions and feeds, but finally landed in that mysterious bourne where the woodbine twineth and the whangdoodle mourneth for its first born. That bourne to-day is stocked and jammed with local projects that were floated to some of the sweetest mouth music it has ever been our good fortune to hear.

HOT WEATHER POSSIBILITIES

There is a movement of genius to provide means to make stout breezes rush through cities of this country in all the hot days of summer. That is by no means impossible even at what men may soon consider reasonable expense. The first idea which strikes the busy mind is that great fans may be erected in groups of one or more high places near the cities and kept whirling by electric power, but that is a crude idea in comparison with the proposition to shower cities with liquid air in such a way that the liquid would become atmosphere in its way down to the people, and thus cool the air which is felt on the person and breathed by each citizen. That might be done periodically on hot days without frightful expense, and it may become one of the standard industries of relief.

AUSTRIA'S FALL

The influence of Austria-Hungary in the Balkan peninsula was never so low as it is today. More than Bulgaria is being punished by Servia, Greece and Roumania. Their united action is a crushing blow to Austrian policy. A cardinal point of that policy was prevention of Servian expansion, and more especially the defeat of Servian efforts to reach the sea, because a powerful Servia might inflame the spirit of nationality among the millions of Serbs in Bosnia and Hungary, and endanger the power that holds them down. Therefore Austria has favored Bulgaria, in the hope that Servia would be crippled, and that the feeling of southern Slav solidarity, which has been stimulated by the war against Turkey, would be reduced to a realization of helplessness.

But Servia waxes while Bulgaria wanes.

CHANGING ENGLAND

The English theory of government has received in the last few years several severe shocks. Through the action of the House of Lords comes another, which once more makes plain that the unwritten theories on which the English constitution has for so many years been conducted are now practically disrupted.

Until within a few years political matters in England were conducted by somewhat of a close corporation. Generally speaking the men influencial on both the government benches and the front benches of the opposition all knew each other belonged to the same general class, and were content to play the game according to the accepted standard. Many apparently fatal deficiencies in the system of government were never serious or even material, because the final English prohibition of "It isn't done, you know," was sufficient to prevent forcing many an issue to its final conclusion.

But with the advent of new men and new parties, men representing the labor party, as it became an influence in political power, and especially men of the school of Lloyd George, who, scornful of precedents, believed that in the pursuit of their theories there was no impropriety in doing, or refraining from doing anything which the law permitted, and with the retaliatory measures perforce adopted by the conservative element, new complications immediately arose.

If men were going to do things which, although they never had been done, were, so far as any written law was concerned, fully permissible, it became necessary to adapt the written law to meet such actions. Much has already been done in this direction. But the Lords seem to have found a new gap in the written law. And so long as the gaps exist, with the spirit with which English politics is now carried on, opposing parties will take advantage of them. For little longer will England be able to boast that her constitution is unwritten.

RICH WESTERN LAND

The Lillooet District of British Columbia Has Many Attractions

Pioneers who have gone into the country between Newport and Lillooet, B. C., declare that there is nothing that can be grown in the temperate zone which cannot be produced without profit in the territory to be opened up by the Pacific Great Eastern. From tidewater over the summit from Newport, with the exception of the Pemberton Meadows, a dense forest of cedar, fir, pine and spruce stretches all the way to the west end of Anderson lakes. Then there comes a section which only needs irrigation to make it the most fruitful section of the province. The water powers are there, but they are undeveloped.

Between Newport and Lillooet there lies a country which is not only full of agricultural possibilities, but is also a sportsman's paradise, containing trout lakes, great wildernesses full of game, and plover and partridge.

Fruits of all kinds grow in abundance. The only drawback has been the lack of transportation facilities. Lillooet itself is one of the historic places of the province. It had its birth in the Cariboo rush of the early sixties, but the discovery of rich placer ground just north of the townsite checked the rush towards Carriboo, and even to-day remnants of miners' cabins and discarded sluices tell the tale of when Lillooet was a gold camp producing several million dollars worth of gold dust. Even now Chinese and Indians make a living by washing the gold out of the river sands, though the result is not sufficient to attract the white miner, though with the opening up of the country hydraulic mining may prove successful and profitable. The Bridge river district has copper, gold, silver and lead in abundance.

Offensive Breath Caused Usually by Catarrh

Simple Remedy Discovered That Cures Without Drugs.

The American people suffer more from Catarrh than from any other disease. It undermines more constitutions and creates more sickness than all other diseases combined. It is, therefore, very dangerous.

You can't successfully treat catarrh by internal dosing—you must in some way send a purifying, healing agent through the breathing organs so that the germs can be reached. This you do every time you inhale Catarrhozone. Its rich essences and healing balsams are breathed all through the nose, throat and lungs and effectively destroy every trace of Catarrh. This is a proven fact.

I endorse Catarrhozone because I know of six bad cases of Catarrh, including my own, that it has cured. It is a sensible remedy because it is capable of going where the disease is. I believe it cures quicker than other remedy because it gets sooner to the source of the disease than anything else I know of. I had headaches, bad breath and much stomach trouble associated with my Catarrh, but they have disappeared since using Catarrhozone, which keeps me free from colds, headaches, catarrh and all winter ills." OTTO E. KRAMER. Belleville, Ont.

Catarrhozone is needed in every home. Large size lasts 2 months price $1.00; small size 50c; trial size 25c. At all storekeepers and druggists or The Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N. Y. and Kingston, Canada.

SOAP SHAVING MACHINE

Turn Crank and Slivers of Soap Fall into Other Hand

In these sanitary days no person who is at all particular would think of using a public piece of soap. So the washstands of hotels, office buildings and the like are equipped with various contrivances to give each visitor his soap uncontaminated. In many of these the soap is liquid, but the newest scheme is a machine for shaving cakes of soap into thin slivers, which drop into the user's hand. A cylindrical receptacle with cutter blades inside receives cakes of soap and a spindle inside centers them and locks them together so they revolve around the cutter. The revolution is achieved by turning a small crank with one hand, whereupon the cuttings drop through an opening in the bottom of the receptacle into the other hand. Nobody touches the original cakes of soap.

TELLS TIME IN DARK

Hood Fits Over Small Clock and Reflects Image of Dial

How many times have you awakened suddenly in the morning to find that you've two hours more to sleep and then, through your exertions to find out the time, found yourself so thoroughly awakened that you couldn't go back to sleep again? This has happened to you numbers of times. But it need not do so if you possess yourself of a little device recently invented. It is a small thing that fits over the clock and looks like a phonograph. It contains a combination of reflectors and a small electric light. A long flexible wire with a push button at the end is connected with the light, which is operated by a battery. When you wake you simply push the button and raise your eyes to the ceiling. There in plain view and very large is a reflection of the face of the clock showing the exact time.

DIFFERENT NAMES OF TURKISH SOLDIERS

Bashi-bazouks are irregular Turkish auxiliaries. The Pomaks, or Moslem mountaineers of the Bulgar race, but enemies of the Bulgarians proper, are correctly described as Bashi-bazouks.

The regular army consists of Nizams, Redifs and Mustafis. A Nizam is a young Ottoman who is serving his term of military service. When a Nizam has finished his time in the active army he passes into the Ihtiat, or first reserve, and then into the Redif, or second reserve. The Redifs form the main part of the Turkish army in time of war.

Finally when the soldiers of the Redif have reached the age of 38 years they become mustafis, a sort of general militia, to be called upon only in times of grave emergency. An Ottoman is liable to service up to the age of 70. The mysterious word ordu simply means army corps.

Nightmares

The average nightmare is attributable to an overloaded stomach. The connection between midnight rarebits and nightmares is quite close indeed. Thus the remedy for the average nightmare is a light supper. Other nightmares are attributable to mental strain. Folks that are continually worrying have them. The remedy for this brand of nightmare is relaxing recreation in the evening—anything to divert the worried mind to new channels.

Titanic's Barber to See Again

Unable to resist traveling over the sea, August F. Welkman of Palmyra, N. Mr. Welkman said after his experience that he would never go to sea again, but he re-shipped as chief barber on the Lusitania. Welkman says that when on land he is like a fish out of water.

THE BRITISH CANADIAN BRICK AND COAL COMPANY, LTD.

Incorporated under the Manitoba Joint Stock Companies Act.
NO PERSONAL LIABILITY

AUTHORIZED CAPITAL - $500,000.

Consisting of
$200.000. 7 Per Cent Preferred at $10.00 Per Share, with Bonus of 25 per cent Common. $300.000 Common at $10.00 per share

DIRECTORS:

J. S. DOUGLAS, Merchant, Winnipeg.
W. F. TALLMAN, Street Commissioner, Winnipeg.
A. B. WOOLDRIDGE, Gentleman, Winnipeg.
D. W. McKERCHAR, Barrister, Winnipeg.
V. A. TALBOT, Real Estate Broker, Winnipeg.

The above Company has purchased from the Excelsior Coal and Brick Co., Ltd., their whole plant as a going concern, the purchase price to be taken in shares of the new Company, and it is the intention of the Directoss to equip the plant to make it one of the largest in the West.

The plant is situated in that rich tract of mineral producing country surrounding Estevan, and is near the town. It comprises 640 acres of the best clay and coal to be found anywhere.

The shaft of the coal mine has been sunk to a depth of seventy feet to reach a seam of the best lignite coal, and there are enough entries and passages to enable an output, at slight expense, of 200 tons of coal per day. Other mines in the district are producing less and making considerable profit. A conservative estimate of the profit on each ton is $1.00, but from Government borings near the property it has been shown that there is a seam of coal 650 feet from the surface which is similar to the Lethbridge coal, and which could be sold f.o.b. the mine for at least $5.00 per ton, netting the Company $3.50 per ton. It is to reach this seam and further equip the brick plant that the issue of stock has been made.

There is a constant and ever-increasing demand for brick. At the present moment the price for common brick all over the West is from $12.50—$13.00 per thousand. The clay on our property is of the finest, and makes a brick second to none. We can make bricks for about $4.00 per thousand, so that the profit on the product is considerable. It is the intention of the Company to increase the present brick plant to allow of an output of from 75,000—100,000 common bricks per day, and at least 25,000 pressed bricks, which retail at $25.00 per thousand and cost about $7.00 to produce.

Under the coal there is a strata of fireclay, which is extremely scarce in Canada, and commands a high price. It is intended to instal a machine for the making of fire brick, which is being almost entirely brought from the United States and Scotland; also to manufacture sewer pipes and hollow tiles. Firebrick and hollow tiles command the high price of $40.00 per thousand, and we can make them for less than $8.00.

Coal and brick run in conjunction is probably the finest profit-making combination known. It has been proven over and over again that with competent management such a proposition is a success from the first.

The Directors have insured the success of the new Company by engaging the services of one of the most expert brick men in the West, who will supervise the laying out and working of the new plant.

It is with unbounded faith in the future of this western country that the Directors have decided on offering to the public a share in its development and wealth. The man who invests in this proposition makes a two-fold investment. He invests and aids in the development of his country, and at the same time puts his capital to profitable use.

CANOE RACING

Brooklyn, N. Y., July 19. — Leo Friede of the Manhattan Canoe Club was successful in defending the international canoe challenge trophy for the New York Canoe Club against Ralph B. Britton of the Gananoque Canoe and Motor Boat Club, the Canadian challenger. Friede won over the eight-mile course by a margin of 2 minutes and 12 seconds. In the first race, sailed last Friday, Friede led the Canadian over the line at the finish by 1 minute 54 seconds. In this race, however, Britton was disqualified for fouling a buoy.

Both races were sailed over a triangular course on the Gravesend Bay off the Marine and Field Club.

BASEBALL

Chicago, July 19.—If plans outlined by Managers Evers and Tinker of the Cubs and Reds materialize, Chicago fans may see the "Old Guard" reassembled and wearing Chicago Cub fighting togs some afternoon late in September.

The idea is to have Tinker, Brown, Kling and Sheckard, now of the Reds; Chance of the Yankees; Zimmerman, Schulte, Evers and Reulbach of the present day Cubs, and Artie Hofman, recently released to Nashville, reunite and battle the White Sox on either the South or West Side grounds, the receipts to be turned over to the widow of Jimmy Doyle, former Cub third baseman, who died in February, 1912, following an operation for appendicitis.

New Haven, Ct., July 19. —Bench warrants, charging them with having taken part in a professional baseball game on Sunday, were issued by Judge Isaac Wolfe of the common pleas court, for George M. Cameron, owner of the New Haven Eastern Association team; James A. Clarkin, owner of the Hartford club of the same league, and 24 players, members of both teams. The warrants charged participation in a game on Sunday at Savin Rock.

Chicago, July 19.—Pitcher Liefield was released to Atlanta by the Cubs and Robert H. Craig, a college shortstop who came here from the New York State League, was released to Terre Haute, Ind. The veteran Liefield has not been in form this season, and the position at short is well fortified with Bridwell and Corriden.

New York, July 19.—There will be no change in the personnel of the National League staff of umpires this season, according to a statement issued tonight by President Thomas J. Lynch of the league. Mr. Lynch says that despite adverse criticism of umpires by several club owners, he has found the umpiring in the National League this year to have been as good as at any time in the last four years and that therefore his staff of judges of the game will not be changed.

Albany, July 19.—A committee representing the state conference of mayors requested Gov. Sulzer to recommend to the extraordinary session of the Legislature when it reconvenes Wednesday night, legislation designed to give municipalities home rule in the matter of Sunday baseball.

The committee's action followed a poll of the mayors of the state, which resulted in 27 out of 32 mayors favoring an amendment which would "permit the playing of baseball on Sundays in communities desiring the same."

Gov. Sulzer took the question under advisement.

THE POULTRYMAN

Should be Conscientious and Careful, a Good Student and Observer

The man managing any business enterprise is really responsible for the success or failure of that enterprise. Successful poultry keeping is no exception of the rule. It is a business of details, and an efficient poultryman should be careful of paying close attention to details. It is lack of this one quality more than of any other which has doubtless caused most of the numerous failures in this work.

The poultryman should be conscientious and careful in this work, and a good student and observer. He should make a close study of the habits and conditions of his various flocks, and should try to make the individual as much as possible the unit of study. He should be willing to try new ideas, and to profit by the experience of others.

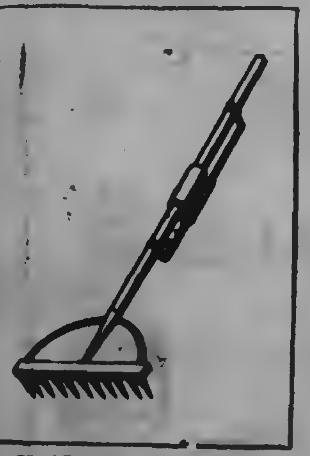
Poultry keeping is to-day in its infancy as an art when compared with the other branches of animal husbandry, and new thoughts and improved methods of feeding, housing, and breeding are constantly being brought to light. "New ideas are what makes progress," and progress makes greater profits.

It is important to remember that success in a business requiring constant thought and attention to the various details of management calls for a natural aptitude or liking for the occupation. With this natural love for the work, and a good practical training the production of market eggs should bring a satisfactory return on the money invested. Phenomenal profits should not be expected.

RAKE ATTACHMENT

Grip Slides Back and Forth as Handle Moves That Way

Any person who has ever used a rake wil recall, if they stop to think, that the raking was usually done with one hand. The other hand was used merely as a sliding grip to guide the implement. After a few hours of this sort of work a person who is not accustomed to it is apt to find blisters on the hand that played the guide. To obviate this a New Jersey man has designed a sliding grip that is attached to the rake handle. A long piece of wire, with its ends coiled around the handle, extends parallel to the latter for some distance. The grip, which may be of rubber or cork or any suitable substance, slides back and forth on the handle and the wire. This wore acts as a stop so that the movement of the rake is limited to a reasonable space.



GUARDS AGAINST BLISTERS.

COAST INDIANS ARE SEMI-ASIATIC

Father Fortin, a Jesuit Priest, Believes He Has Proof of Their Coming Ages Ago.

It was a tale of stern hardship and strange adventure in the "eternal twilight" of the "Barren Lands," that was told by the Red Father Fortin, in Montreal upon his arrival from the West where he spent twenty years in a Jesuit Mission to the Indians of Northern British Columbia and the Yukon.

As a result of long contact with the Indians of the North Country, Father Fortin has evolved an original theory with regard to the origin of the Coast Indians. It is his firm conviction that these Indans are not an indigenous race of this continent, but that they are semi-Asiatic and semi-Esquimaux. The main argument advanced by the missionary in support of his theory is contained in an extensive investigation of the folk-lore and traditions of the various tribes of the Coast that have managed to maintain their integrity. The results of his research led Father Fortin to determine approximately the date of migration of the ancestors of those tribes.

About ten thousand years ago, Father Fortin believes, there was a terrible revolution in northern Asia and Siberia—one of the periodic outbursts of pent-up savagery such as desolated Europe in the fifth century of the Christian era. A harried remnant of a semi-Asiatic Siberian tribes, driven helplessly before some vast horde of pillagers, found its way across the Behring Straits and settled on the Pacific coast of America.

Father Fortin says he found unmistakable evidence of this migration in the form of tradition which bear close resemblance to the traditions of the so-called Mongolion tribes of Southern Siberia. Probably the most remarkable point of Father Fortin's theory is that these migrated tribes brought with them a distinct and advanced civilization whch practically disappeared in the course of many generatons amidst a new environment.

"I am confident," said Father Fortin, "that a close analysis of physical characteristics shows that these nondescript tribes are from the same parent stock as the Japanese. Probably the Japs themselves were driven to their Island Kingdom by similar disturbances on the continent. The fact of the greater degree of enterprise and national consciousness being shown by the Japs can be ascribed almost entirely to a more congenial and vigorous environment."

Curious Scientific Prediction.

Many people are familiar with the story often told of the great naturalist Cuvier, to the effect that, given a single bone, he could reconstruct the animal to which it belonged. That a somewhat similar law of organization runs through the various species that form families in the animal world is indicated by a quaint case of scientific prediction, to which attention has again been called.

It appears that Ehrenberg, when engaged in a study of the minute animals called diatoms, found that many species were distinguished by the number of rays they possessed. In the series of specimens that he had, however, he could find none having, respectively, 27, 29, 30, 31, 37, 39, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 48 and 49 rays. Still he predicted that the missing species would some day turn up. This prediction has been verified; for ten of them have since been discovered, leaving only three to be accounted for.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

Written by
DR. DAVID H. REEDER,
Chicago, Ill.

DIARRHOEA: When hot weather comes we change our diet almost by instinct. The great cuts of meat that looked tempting during the winter are far from being so now. Instead the cool fresh vegetables not only delight the eye, but tempt the palate. The juices of luscious fruit expressed and made into cooling drinks did not appeal to us in January, but in July we can hardly get enough.

When great changes come suddenly, there is always more or less danger. We are prone to be intemperate. The heat opens the pores of the skin all over the body and tiny rivers of water seem to pour out from every little opening. In a short time we feel this drain of water and we are thirsty; almost any water appeals to us, but the fruit juices most of all. Perhaps the good old fashioned lemonade, not too sweet, is the most refreshing and healthful of all, but if we allow ourselves to eat fresh ripe fruits and berries, as well as the green vegetables and then drink quantities of ice water or other cooling drink, we at once place ourselves in danger. Nature tries to help us by starting up a diarrhoea so that we may get rid of the unaccustomed materials. Then fear steps in and instead of keeping as quiet as possible and letting the irritating materials be thrown off, we send in a hurry for something to check it. It great alarm we tell the old doctor of the terrible pains and the griping and the drain upon our strength. He promptly measures out a few doses of opiates and after taking the drug the pain ceases and the bowels are paralyzed to such an extent that the diarrhoea is stopped. What a great physician. How thankful we feel and now we can safely go at the fruit and the cold drinks again. If another attack comes the doctor is close by and again he can quickly cure. Never was a greater mistake made than to suppress a natural activity of the bowels when they are trying to get rid of a surplus of irritating materials to which they are unaccustomed. Stop putting things into the stomach. Rest. Use common sense. Perhaps you will say that you haven't any or you would not have so foolishly over eaten. When a diarrhoea persists even after food and liquid have been withheld for a day or more I sometimes recommend a small cup of boiled milk, but as a rule the simple act of keeping still and withholding food of all kinds is sufficient.

The formula for several simple herb remedies that are safe and effective are given in the Home Health Club book Vol. 5 entitled "Medicinal Plants of America and others." As a general proposition severe constipation is more dangerous in hot weather than a mild diarrhoea, but I have told you so many times how to overcome it that you would probably resent another telling.

Professor R. I. Smith, entomologist, North Carolina agricultural station, says: "Formalin is a very successful poison for flies in spite of many reports to the contrary. The method that I have found most successful is the use of formalin in milk with the following proportions:

"One ounce (two tablespoonfuls) of formalin; sixteen ounce (one pint) of equal parts of milk and water.

"In this proportion the mixture seems to attract the flies much better than when used in sweetened water. The mixture should be exposed in shallow plates. A piece of bread in the middle of the plate furnishes more space for the flies to alight and feed and in this way serves to attract a greater number of them. I first used this poison in a milk room where the flies were very numerous and poisoned over 5000 flies in less than twenty-four hours on several occasions. Over a pint of flies were swept up in the room each time the poison was used.

"Another experiment was used in a large calf barn where the flies were numerous. I exposed six ordinary sized plates of the formalin poison mixture and killed about 40,000 (four quarts of flies) between 12 o'clock noon and 8 the next morning. This is only an illustration of what can be done with formalin around stables where flies are breeding. I could cite a number of cases where the formalin poison mixture has been used in unscreened kitchens and dining rooms and resulted in killing practically all the flies. A good place to use this formalin, is on the front and back porches, where flies are frequently numerous, and waiting to enter when ever the doors are opened."

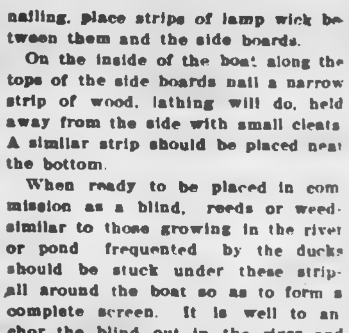
Dear Doctor: Do you know of a recipe to remove tartar from the teeth, and to keep same in good condition, free from decay, etc. Thanking you in advance, I am C.H.

There is no preparation which can be relied on entirely to prevent tartar accumulating on the teeth. By forming the habit of brushing them regularly after each meal and having them thoroughly cleaned and put in good shape once or twice a year by a dentist, you will be able to keep your teeth in good condition. Any of the best known dental creams or powders may be used to advantage. Occasional use of a mouth wash or Hydrogen Peroxide or Liquor Antiseptic Alkalinus, either being first diluted with equal parts of warm water is beneficial. Of course it is necessary to keep the digestive organs in the best possible state. The Compound Gentian formula, frequently mentioned in these notes will be found excellent whenever there is any tendency to sluggish conditions of the liver or bowels, with the resulting formation of coating on the tongue or teeth. If there is any tendency to constipation it should be avoided by the inclusion in the diet of a large proportion of laxative foods, such as bran bread, green vegetables, fruits, etc.

FOR DUCK HUNTERS

How to Successfully Deceive the Elusive Bird

Every duck hunter requires a blind so that he can go out into the open and wait for the elusive bird. The man who hasn't a blind can easily construct one by using a flat bottomed boat or punt as a basis for his structure. The one shown in the illustration is an excellent shape to follow. It is 15 feet long, 4 feet wide and about 20 inches deep in the centre and can be rowed from either end with the additional advantage of having plenty of room for the hunter to lie down. The sides are made with boards held together with battens on the inside of the boat near the ends and at the middle. Two pins are driven in the top of each side board to be used as row locks. The bottom is made of matched boards 5 inches wide nailed to the side pieces and to a keel strip which runs the length of the boat inside, with galvanized nails. These boards should be placed as closely together as possible, with white lead liberally applied to the joints. Before nailing, place strips of lamp wick between them and the side boards.



On the inside of the boat along the tops of the side boards nail a narrow strip of wood, lathing will do, held away from the side with small cleats. A similar strip should be placed near the bottom.

When ready to be placed in commission as a blind, reeds or weeds similar to those growing in the river or pond frequented by the ducks should be stuck under these strips all around the boat so as to form a complete screen. It is well to anchor the blind out in the river and keep it there for some time during the duck season so that the ducks can become accustomed to seeing it.

NO CHILD REALLY BAD

No child can be really bad if he has had the right training. If the children of the world were corralled in a great field you would find them all mildness and sweetness. If they were born mean and wicked they would sting like young serpents or claw and scratch like little tigers, or bite like wolves. Instead they coo and play and howl to stretch their lungs. If a child of 5 years is a torment, if he is cruel to animals, if he is lacking in respect for older people, it is because his mother does not understand that a little discipline is a great kindness. The indulgent mother who permits her child to grow into a young lemon is respected by none—least of all by the child.

TOO MUCH EXERCISE

Busy Business Men Overdo Their Work and Play, Doctors Say

That the London business man takes too much exercise was the startling assertion of a physician at the Conference of Hygiene for Business Men held in Britain's metropolis.

The city man is said to be too fond of rushing from the intellectual toil of his office to the strenuous golf links. One doctor stated that this practice is a fruitful source of neurathenia. "It is simply draining your nervous system and energy by two taps instead of one," he said. According to this expert there is no relation between the size of the muscles and health.

Most of the delegates preached the simple life for city men, who were all too busy to attend the sessions of the conference.

All of the heavy artillery of the medical men was brought to bear against the business lunch and the business man was told to either go without it or to drop meat from the midday menu. One delegate drew a gloomy picture of the crowded drug stores in the business districts where the tired office men resort for "bracers."

HON. GEO. H. PERLEY

Some Life History of a Man Who Has Prospered in Canada

Hon. George H. Perley Minister without portfolio in the Dominion Cabinet is a lumberman of the Ottawa Valley; he is actively concerned in several firms, and in particular is heavily interested in pulpwood transactions. Also he is a millionaire.

He is a slight man of middle height with a pale, rather thin face, with a rather closely trimmed beard, remarkably black, and abundant hair, also remarkably black, a scrutinising dark eye and a certain air of physical delicacy.

Mr. Perley was born in the United States. He belongs to a New Hampshire family, the stock being originally Welsh. Prior to 1857, W. G. Perley, the Cabinet Minister's father lived in New Lebanon, New Hampshire; in that year he came to Ottawa, prospered exceedingly, became naturalized, and from 1887 till his death in 1890 was M. P. for the capital city.

When the elder Perley made the change of residence he delayed moving his family, and the future Cabinet Minister was born at New Lebanon while his father was a resident of Ottawa. The American connection was kept up for some years, and the younger Perley, after attending the Ottawa Grammar School, was sent to St. Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire. He went to Harvard and graduated there, taking his A. B. in 1878.

In 1900 he went into politics. He contested Russell and was beaten. In 1902, there was a bye-election in the country of Argenteuil in Quebec across the Ottawa River from Russell. Mr. Perley had interests in the county and be contested it, only to be beaten again. He settled down to nurse the constituency, and in the general election of 1904 he won. In 1910 he was made Chief Whip of the Conservative party and when the Conservatives came into power in 1911, Mr. Perley was taken into the Cabinet.

UNIQUE HAT SUPPORT

Wire Standards Held Up Headgear or Keep it Safely on

At last! Now let the milliners do their worst. A milliner has invented a hat support which brings the weight of women's headgear on their shoulders. Two wire standards are bent into inverted V-shaped crotches at their lower ends and at their upper ends are connected with the hat frame. The wearer is supposed to have loops sewed to the shoulders of her coat or waist or formed by tying ribbons around the shoulders and under the armpits and into these loops the lower ends of the wires hook. There is nothing in the Patent Office Report to indicate that the inventor is a humorist, except the illustration and description of his device. For motor use it should be entirely effective, as any wind not strong enough to blow a woman out of the car cannot remove her hat. And finally, she need never ask, "is my hat on straight?"

HATS ALWAYS "ON STRAIGHT."

WANT HUGE FORTUNE

Ontario and Montreal People Claimants for Millions in Holland Bank

Woven around the three hundred millions of dollars which have been accumulating in the vaults of the National Bank of Holland for two and one half centuries, and in the distribution of which several Canadians hope to participate, there is a story of adventure and intrigue substantiated apparently by the soundest of proofs which in dramatic interest rivals the conceptions of Dumas or Balzac.

Link by link, the descendants of Paul Werts, soldier of fortune, East Indian adventurer, lieutenant of Gustavus Adolphus and field marshal of Holland, have riveted a chain which proves that the will produced after his death in 1676, by his housekeeper Johanna van der Planken, was a forgery and that the millions he acquired trading in the Dutch East Indies are the lawful property of the descendants of his step-brothers, and step-sister Peter, Heinrich and Anna.

These early banded themselves together to secure justice and have battled against varying forces to secure their rights. The last attempt was made in 1874 when the Dutch courts declared that he will which purported to leave everything Wertz had acquired during his career of adventure to Johanna van der Planken and the child whose parentage she endeavored to fasten on the dead general was a forgery. Lack of funds then resulted in the case being dropped, but now three Werts family associations are unitedly striving to reopen the case and wrest from the Dutch banks the money which they tacitly admit they cannot legally hold an admission contained in an offer to restore thirty-two million dollars made sixty years ago.

Negotiations carried on with the Dutch government by W. J. Snyder, of Chicago and his wife, who is a direct descendant of a nephew of the Field Marshal give the highest hopes that the claim will succeed, for the Netherlands government offered to compromise the case again.

Mr. Snyder, who is a son of the late George C. Snyder, of Wales, Ont., and whose mother resides with her daughter, Mrs. Frank Morgan of Montreal, is also a Werts descendant through a maternal ancestor of his father, and Mrs. George Snyder, and her daughter are therefore entitled to a share of this long sequestered treasure.

COMING OF AGE IN PRINCE'S CASE

It is commonly said and supposed that a Prince of Wales "comes of age" on his eighteenth birthday. In point of fact he does, and he does not. The occasion has been well described as "a contingent coming of age," for the words are only applicable to the prince as heir to the throne, while they are not applicable to him in his private capacity. From and after the completion of his, or her, eighteenth birthday, the heir is qualified to succeed to the full possession of the throne on the occurrence of a vacancy, as was actually the case of the Princess Victoria, who became queen less than a month after her eighteenth birthday. Had William IV. died a year earlier a Regent would have been necessary; but as it happened, and as we all know, there was no question of anything of the kind, and Queen Victoria presided at her first council with all the authority of a reigning queen. In the case of the death declared incapacity of the sovereign, the heir, having reached the age of eighteen, becomes king or regent as the case may be. In this sense, then, "full age" means eighteen years. But in all others the minority of the Prince of Wales continues.

THE NORTH BOUNDARY

Line Between Alaska and Canada Ends at Arctic's Shore

The last of the long chain of bronze monuments that mark the Alaskan boundary between the United States and Canada in as straight a line as the broad red line that is ruled up the map was planted within a few feet of the Arctic ocean, at the land end of the 141st meridian, and nine miles east of Demarcation Point and 40 miles west of Herschel Island.

Contrary to the common idea of the Arctic, the last boundary monument was planted in a meadow that is a mass of bloom in summer. Huge California poppies, lupines, daisies, Johnny-jump-ups, blue bells and most of the common field flowers bloom in bright patches about it. Close by is a low-cut bank which is the beach of the almost tideless ocean.

The monuments are set approximately four miles apart, and some of them are in almost inaccessible spots in the rugged, barren Arctic range. When pack horses could not reach the points, monuments, materials and tools had to be carried on men's backs up the towering cliffs.

BUYING A HORSE

Practical Pointers for the Amateur—How to Locate Faults

If you are buying a horse never be satisfied that he is thoroughly sound or serviceable until you have seen him in action.

In mild cases of string-halt faulty action is observed only upon the start or backing. The feet should be picked up to show how the animal will stand while being shod. The horse should next be placed in harness, and attention should be given to his behaviour while the harness is being fitted. Observe whether he kicks, strikes, or bites when the girth is tightened. He should be driven in his accustomed manner—single or double if for driving, and in a cart or waggon if for heavy work. The rein should be taken so as to determine whether he has a hard or tender mouth, and to note his manner of responding to the pull. Also observe whether he shies or frightens at strange objects when being hitched to the cart. One should be certain that this is not due to improper fitting harness before rejecting him. A tight-fitting collar may make the difference between a proper acting animal and one that is wholly objectionable.

The wind should be thoroughly tested for whistling, for roaring, and for heaves. The ear of the examiner should be placed to the nostrils, to the throat and to the sides of the chest, and the hands placed upon the flanks to detect any unnatural sounds in breathing.

FINDING THE PRODIGALS

Woman Author Engaged in Re-uniting Scattered Families in New World

Are you a "prodigal son?" If so Mrs. Richard Waaler is looking for you. Mrs. Waaler is a well known author and journalist, from Christiana, Norway. She has made it her mission to find prodigal sons all over the world, and get them into touch with the home folks.

Being a mother of twelve children herself, she conceived the idea that there must be many mothers who were mourning for sons who had emigrated and failed to write home. She first went on a lecturing tour through Norway, and explained her mission, getting hundreds of letters and addresses to look up. Then she crossed the Atlantic and at once good results were produced by her work in the United States. Then she crossed into Canada, but finding few Norwegians in the Eastern part of the Dominion, intends to pursue her work in the West. Later she will write a book on her travels.

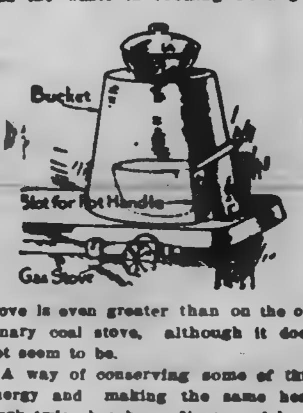
WOMAN FINDS WAY TO USE HEAT TWICE AND CUTS FUEL BILL BY IT

Few people know what enormous amounts of heat are wasted every day in the ordinary methods of cooking and the waste in cooking on a gas stove is even greater than on the ordinary coal stove, although it does not seem to be.

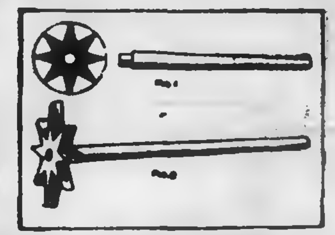


A way of conserving some of this energy and making the same heat work twice has been discovered by a southern housewife. She secured an old iron bucket and cut a slot in the side large enough to permit the handle of a saucepan to pass through it easily and long enough to allow the bucket to be turned over the saucepan when it was on the stove.

Then when she is using a saucepan to stew something she turns the bucket over it and puts something else to cook on the bucket. It might seem like a small saving, but it counts up in dollars and cents in a year.

Mix With a "Quirl"

This little thing is called a "quirl" and is an egg beater, a potato masher, a lemon squeezer, a batter mixer and host of other useful things. It consists simply of a hardwood handle with a star-shaped piece of wood on the end. The star is attached very securely and rigidly to the handle so that it cannot revolve. It is easily cleaned and is used by twirling it between the palms of the hands, the star being buried in the liquid or materials it is desired to mix. The size of the star is left entirely to the fancy of housekeeper. It should not be made of material more than one-half inch thick, however, and two to three inches is a good diameter for it.



ORIGIN OF THE BAGPIPES

Reached Present State of Completeness After Centuries of Evolution

In a lecture in Dublin Mr. E. Kent reviewed the history of the bagpipe and illustrated his remarks throughout with limelight views. He showed the bagpipes to have originated in the simple reed such as children construct from the rushes that grow by the river banks.

The addition in time of a bladder and a few notes to the chanter produced the first rude bagpipe. The chanter developed until various pleasing tones could be produced, and a drone was added. The lecturer showed that the drone was undoubtedly antique but could not explain its origin. From one drone to two or more was a natural and inevitable step. Then the final development of the bagpipes in Europe, with the sole exception of Ireland, was the substitution in certain cases of a bellows for the player's mouth.

Ireland makes a further advance by adding to the chanter and drones a new part known as the "regulator," this being a keyed pipe upon which a skillful player could produce pleasing harmonies. The lecturer showed by means of drawings and sculptural remains that the pipes were a favorite instrument in the fourteenth and sixteenth centuries.

TRANS-BALTIC MAILS BY AIR

Germany Makes Such a Proposal to Denmark

Germany has asked Denmark whether it is disposed to employ German airships in carrying the trans-Baltic mails, Denmark paying a small subsidy which will be devoted to building and maintaining an airship station at Amagar, near Copenhagen. Germany contends that air mail service would be particularly advantageous in winter, when the ice often delays steamships.

Denmark acknowledged the receipt of the proposal and expressed the greatest interest in the scheme, but as yet has made no decision.

Young Men and Money

Mr. Justice Sutherland, addressing the graduating class of the Windsor Collegiate Institute, said:

"The young men of to-day, with moderate salaries, are spending five times the amount their fathers spent, and the young women are encouraging them to do so."

Fancy Price for Bull

W. J. Cummings of Winnipeg paid $10,000 for a 13 months' old Holstein bull, bred by D. G. Monroe, a prominent cattle breeder of the state of Washington. The deal was closed and the money paid over without Mr. Cummings even seeing the animal, nor were Mr. Cummings and Mr. Monroe previously acquainted.

Reversing the process of keeping tropical plants in hot houses in temperate climates, a botanical garden at Calcutta utilizes a cold house for plants from cooler lands.

A TENDERFOOT'S WOOING

had withdrawn to gather force for their real attack. Whatever answers to the fiery cross amongst the red men had been flying around the country in the last two days, and Jim Combe had never known until that moment how many Indians there were scattered through the timber of British Columbia.

The hog's back was dotted with their camp fires and tents; a line of them stretched across the big meadow; another body of them held the road to Soda Creek. The ranch was as regularly invested as if its foes had been European troops instead of mere redskins. With infinitely more cunning than even Combe had given them credit for, the Chilcotens had allowed the white men to return unmolested to their lair, only to find themselves in a trap from which there appeared to be no escape unless Toma or Fairclough had won through and could bring help.

Until this last morning Jim had felt certain that one or other would succeed in getting through; but now, seeing the methodical way in which the Indians had conducted the campaign, he not only doubted, he disbelieved it, and when he met Kitty a little later, her pretty face pale and troubled, a great wave of pity and remorse almost unmanned him.

In his anguish of mind he tried to speak to his little friend in the old way that had been so dear to both of them, but his tongue failed him, and she, not realizing that it was the old Jim, treated him with the coldness he had been at such trouble to teach her.

CHAPTER XXV.

You cannot hide death any more than you can escape it. There is a subtle influence which spreads from a dead man so that even the dumb beasts feel and acknowledge it, and this atmosphere of horror had spread through the ranch house in spite of the men's reticence.

The women knew, though they asked no questions. Their eyes counted the men as they gathered for their morning meal; but if they guessed they said nothing.

Indeed, scarcely a word passed between them until the men [illegible] in the long room after the meal, and even then for a while [illegible]. Though for the moment the [illegible] were unmolested, everyone knew that the ring which surrounded them was intact, and their destruction but a question of hours.

"The men had better sleep in watches during the day, Jim. We shall want all hands on guard to-night, if Toma does not bring help before then. Hornsly and his posse could hardly get through by daylight if they came."

Jim made no reply.

"Don't you think that they will get here to-day?"

In spite of his courage there was a shake in Rolt's voice which he could not hide. For himself he cared little, but the thought of the sweet woman who was all the world to him broke the strong man's nerve.

"It's no good fooling ourselves, Rolt, any longer. No, I don't think any of our messengers are alive today."

The younger Fairclough turned very white, but he pulled himself together, and laughed bravely.

"You don't know my brother, Combe. There's no fear that any pack of niggers will wipe him out."

"I hope not. He is a good man and I daresay that you are right, in which case we shall have help before nightfall, but we must not calculate upon that. We've calculated too much on such things already. We've got to do somethings for ourselves now, right away."

"That's talking," assented Al, "and there's only one thing as we can do."

"What is that?"

"Shoot the women, and die fighting, or save them."

It was brutally said, but it had the advantage of bringing the issue plainly before every one.

"How can we save them?"

"There's only one way. The Indians are all here now. If a man could get through that ring he'd have a clear course to Sody. There's five horses in the kitchen."

"But we cain't leave the place unguarded."

"No, of course not. It's got to be one at a time till we do get through, and if no one gets through—well, then, Boss, we'd most as well take a turn at praying."

For a moment there was silence, and then someone asked:

"Is it to be by day-light, or at night?"

"I guess it don't make no odds," replied Al. "We should have had a good show last night, but the fog has all gone. They won't do much attacking in broad daylight, our people shoot too straight, and the Injuns know it, but they'll do mighty little sleeping at night. I'd leave that to the man as goes. Kin I have that roan as Jim rode for a first shot, Boss?"

It was said so quietly, that no one ignorant of the circumstances, would have guessed that the rough and grizzled old rider was offering his life, but the color came to the Boss's eyes as he answered:

"The stakes are mine, Al, and I play them."

"Pardon, sir, I think you forget," said Anstruther, courteously, "the stakes are not all yours. Volunteers for a forlorn hope should be unmarried men. The captain's duty is to stay by his ship to the last. Al and Combe have had their turn. You will let me go."

"Nonsense, boy, you couldn't sit a horse now."

"Nor couldn't find his way if he did get through. See here, Rolt. It's Al or me for this job, and Al's wounded, so it's me," and Combe turned to leave the room.

But Anstruther caught him by the arm.

"No, by heaven, you don't, Combe! It is for Mr. Rolt to decide. You are not master here. What do you say, sir? Will you shame me? Is it not my right? Combe went for me. The whole trouble is my fault. I can never hold up my head again if you don't let me go."

There was such a genuine ring of entreaty in the young fellow's voice that Rolt, looking at him, wavered.

He understood that, to a man like Anstruther, there might be worse things than death.

"Couldn't we settle it by drawing lots? That's what they always do in books."

It was Fairclough who spoke, and in the impasse to which they had come the suggestion met with some favor.

"If I agree to Mr. Fairclough's suggestion," said Rolt, seeing that the feeling of the meeting was with the last speaker, "it will only be on the understanding that all draw. I will waive my right to go first if you will all agree to that. Otherwise I go."

For a few minutes Combe and Anstruther tried to argue with him, but though the easiest-going man in British Columbia as a rule, Rolt could be sufficiently resolute upon occasion.

"It ain't no use arguifying," said Al irritably. "Seems to me we had ought to know the Boss by now. He's that blanked contrary that if every one else was keeping Christmas, he'd put in the day hauling gravel. May as well cut for the deal if he says so."

This settled it, and Rolt, turning to Anstruther, asked him to get a pack of cards from Mrs. Rolt.

When Anstruther had gone to get the cards, Rolt turned to Combe:

"Is it any good keeping this from the ladies? They might prevent his going if the lot should fall to him. Nothing else will, and I don't believe that he could sit a horse for a mile. His ribs can't be knit yet."

"Don't you worry about that colt, Boss. He ain't used to our range yet, but he's a bit of good stuff and harder nor you think. Let him be and give him a fair show. It's five to one against his getting the deal anyway. But you kin tell the ladies. They aren't the sort to holler."

"Thank you, Al, old friend. I knew we might come in."

It was Mary Rolt herself who spoke, having come in quietly while the men were talking, with Kitty by her side, whose young beauty was woefully marred by the strain of the last few days.

If any one had had time to notice such things then, he might have seen struck by the contrast between the two women. A face is after all only the window which a soul looks through, so that whereas the pink and white had died from Kitty's soft cheek, the pretty curls lost their soft coquetry, the dimple become almost a hollow, and she herself a very worn and wistful shadow of the spoiled darling of the ranch; in the other woman the strain had only emphasized every brave line in her clear-cut face, made firmer the curve of her sweet lips, and given depth to her fearless eyes.

Rolt looked at her, and in his eyes was the pride without which love is not perfect.

"You know what we are going to do, Mary, and you know that I am cutting with the rest?"

"Of course. You could do nothing else. I will cut first for you, Dick. Lowest deals, of course?"

She had cast the cards on the table, and now stood facing the men, a tall, slight figure, as calm to all outward seeming as if this were but the beginning of a game of bridge.

"Yes, ma'am. Lowest deals, as you say," replied Al, with a great smile in his deep wrinkles, and under his breath he muttered:

"Holy smoke, ain't she a peach?"

"Ace high?"

"Ace high it is."

"Then I cut for my husband. Whoever cuts the lowest card makes the first attempt."

For a moment her eyes rested on Dick Rolt, and perhaps her lips trembled—they are the only part of the face which no one can control—but if they did, it was so slightly that no one in the room could have sworn to it, and if she sat down somewhat suddenly when she had turned up the knave of diamonds, she had reason enough to be tired, and the room was hot. At once Jim, Al, and Anstruther went to the table together, but Mrs. Rolt held up her hand.

"In order of precedence, please, gentlemen." And then with a little curl about her lips: "Our guest comes first," and young Fairclough came from his corner with somewhat overdone nonchalance and turned a card quickly.

"No luck," he said, as he turned up a nine.

"You don't know yet, Mr. Fairclough," she said sweetly. "The foreman next."

Jim Combe hesitated a moment, and a queer smile spread over his face. He remembered that if a pack of cards is shot over a smooth surface it is not impossible to guess where the low cards will be, the least painted offering the least resistance, and he picked his card carefully.

His rule was justified. The card he chose had only one pip on it, but for a moment his face clouded. Then he smiled again.

"Ace low, you said, Mrs. Rolt?"

"I thought that Jim Combe was a square player," she said, but there was no censure in her tones. "You know the rule, Jim. Stand back. Your turn, Al."

"Give me a little 'un, ma'am."

She hesitated. It is not pleasant to send an old friend to his death, and the cards which had been cut were all high.

"You want me to cut for you, Al?"

"If the Boss don't mind, ma'am."

Rolt nodded to her to humor the old man, but her hand shook as she turned up a five of spades.

"Oh, Al, I'm so sorry."

"Then you ain't got no call to be. It's what I asked for, ain't it, and I mostly asks for what I want," and he swung gaily round on his heels to leave the room.

"Hold on, Al!" said a quiet voice at his elbow, "there is one more to cut yet."

"'Tain't no use, Mr. Anstruther. You ain't fit to go, and there ain't anything there no lower than a five."

"There are three lower, Al. If you please, Mrs. Rolt."

Mrs. Rolt looked up into the quiet smiling face, and saw a light in it which she had never seen before. It was as if Anstruther knew what lay in store for him, and the knowledge made him hold his head more proudly.

"He is right, Al. You pledged yourselves that all should cut. Take your card, Frank."

As she spoke Kitty Clifford moved from her friend's side uncertainly towards Anstruther, and then stood hesitating, her lips trembling and her sweet eyes full of unshed tears.

"What is it, Kitty? Do you want to cut for him?"

She tried to answer, but no sound came from her parted lips.

"Shall she cut for you, Frank?"

"Will you, Miss Clifford—Kitty?" and he held out his hand to her. For a moment the boy and girl stood there hand in hand before that altar of chance, forgetful of the world and reckless of the betrayal of their secret.

It was a strange betrothal, but such it seemed to all who saw them. In a silence which could be felt, the girl's white hand began to move uncertainly over the pack, touching a card here and another there, as if afraid to choose.

The others had drawn their lots at once. To them it seemed that minutes elapsed whilst that little hand wandered over the table, and each man prayed in his own fashion that she might choose aright.

At last, like a child who fears to see the knife, she shut her eyes, and clutching a card, held it up to Anstruther, over whose face a proud smile spread as bright and genuine as daylight.

"Thank you, dear. You have saved my honor. You don't mind if I spoil your pack, Mrs. Rolt. I shall want this card by and by more than you will," and kissing it, he put it into his breast pocket.

But Kitty caught at his hand and cried to him to show it to her.

"Another time, dear. It is the best card in the world for me."

"What was it, Frank? Show it to me, oh, show it to me!"

"Not now, Kitty," and bending down, he kissed her white brow before them all, and with his arm round her waist, half led, half carried, her to Mrs. Rolt.

"Take her away now. For God's sake take her away!" he said, and Mrs. Rolt led Kitty sobbing from the room.

"Oh, Mary! Mary! I have killed him. Frank—"

But Frank Anstruther stood back from the weak pleading hands, and as the two women left the room, his was the only face left in it on which there was no sign of sorrow.

"When the door closed, he sat down on the edge of the table and began to roll a cigarette.

"Let's see that card, pardner. You ain't putting up a job on us?"

"No, Al. There it is," and he showed him the two of hearts.

"Holy smoke! The two-spot! She couldn't have drawed a lower if she'd tried to!"

"Or better. Luck is for the young, Al," and this curiously-minded young man from Piccadilly began to hum a light air to himself, the words of which were:—

> "He ain't no good about the house
> He cain't cut wood."

CHAPTER XXXVI.

"You said, Combe, that I should not be able to find my way to Soda Creek?"

Anstruther was still sitting on the table rolling his cigarette.

"In the dark. It would not be light all the time you were on the road. But you don't have to. It is not likely we are going to let you suicide after that."

Anstruther smiled a little superciliously.

"That has nothing to do with the question. Would you mind coming here for a moment?" and he went to the window.

"That is the road to Soda Creek; the way we came?"

Combe nodded.

"But that is the direct way, as the crow flies?"

"Yes, only there's a bit of a canyon in the way."

"I know. But after?"

"There wouldn't be any after. There's no way across the canyon until you come to the place where the road crosses it. It's four hundred feet deep with sides like the walls of a house."

"If there was a bridge across it, it would shorten the distance by a mile, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, by two, I should think. But there isn't any bridge and the Indians ain't going to wait whilst we build one."

"Could one be built? How wide is the canyon?"

"Not more than twenty or thirty feet at the Buck's Jump. It could be bridged there easily enough; but what's the good of talking. It aint bridged."

"Where is the Buck's Jump. There, isn't it?"

"Yes, right against that big lone pine with the broken top."

"Very nearly in a direct line for Soda Creek?"

"In a plumb straight line. That pine might have been put there for a surveyor's post."

"So I thought," said Anstruther, and he stood there measuring the distance with his eye, and noting the land marks.

Combe watched him, and at last, with an obvious effort, he said:

"Forgive me, Anstruther. Perhaps you don't think it is my business, but I've got to speak. I know just how you feel, and it's the way a man ought to feel, but you know you can't go now. It wouldn't be a square deal to Miss Crawford."

A Tour Through Canada

It was barely a year since I had left the shores of Canada behind me, but the irresistible magnetism of the Dominion, which is causing not armies but peoples to mobilize and trek in tens of thousands to its soil, drew me as a magnet, and once more I visited the nine great provinces which stretch from ocean to ocean. Again I heard the roar of a great "nation factory" and saw the bustle and activity of a mighty people in the making. New towns had sprung up. Cities had raced along to adolescence. The prairie had yielded up yet more of the isolation and had blossomed into fruitfulness. Railways had spread yet further their ramifications of steel. Business had grown. Manufactures had increased. Records had everywhere gone by the board, and everywhere the country throbbed with increasing energy and faced the future with growing optimism. Yes, optimism is the dominant note in the nine provinces. There is a belief in Canada's destiny which nothing will shake—a belief soundly based. For it rests upon the knowledge of the natural wealth which has simply been poured into Canada's lap. The soil, the mine, the river, all proclaim indeed the bounteousness of Nature, and point to a future beside which the present and past sink into sheer insignificance. Despite the grand movement of peoples from all points of the compass, and the vast increases in the products of the soil, boundless unbroken areas still await the plough.

To-day Canada is looming larger and larger not only in our economic outlook, but in our political calculations. This rise of a stalwart nation is going to transform the prospects, perhaps shift the centre of gravity of the British Empire. The country is calling for men and women from home to accept its gifts of fertile soil and the facilities for the profitable employment of capital in trade and manufacturing enterprises.—Leo Scheff, in Lloyd's Weekly News.

ANTI-RAT-NAIL-FENCE WILL KEEP RATS OUT

It is a peculiarity of rats that when they gnaw a hole through a door they usually select one of the corners and most times this is a lower corner. If the owner of the door wants to play a good joke on the rats in his house he can make the door rat proof by simply driving a few wire nails into it as shown in the sketch. If the rat plague is very bad in his house he can extend the row of nails all the way across the bottom of the door and up the side as far as he thinks the danger lies. Rats have very sharp teeth, but there is no rat yet discovered that can gnaw through a fence of nails. The door will not be marred in the least by this operation.

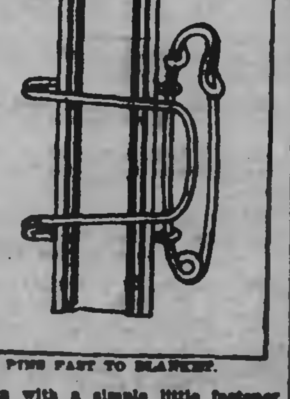
THE CALL OF CANADA

Canada is as large as 30 United Kingdoms and 18 Germanies, yet the stay-at-home Briton prefers to remain where he is, presumably content to fritter his humble life away either in the feudal surroundings of some English village, or to wander into towns, and working at a miserable pittance help to depress the market all the time. Yet Canada is calling aloud for Englishmen of every station and calling to take advantage of the great opportunities she offers and bidding them to participate in the Dominion's untold wealth and in the greatness of the wonderful land which will one day rival the glories of its mighty neighbors and become the pivotal State of the British Empire itself.—Mr. Leo Scheff, in "The Graphic."

HORSE BLANKET CLIP

Hooks Into Breeching and Keeps Cover From Blowing off

No matter how carefully a man may blanket his horse, the wind or the animal's own restlessness may cause the cover to be either blown off or thrown off. The horse then suffers from the cold and the blanket is trampled on and torn. But along comes a man with a simple little fastener that prevents any such mishaps. A piece of wire is bent into a hook that opens upward. At the top is a large safety pin by which the device can be fastened to the blanket in an instant, or it can be left fastened. All that need be done, then, to keep the cover on is to hook the wire under the breeching strap, and no matter how hard the wind blows or how much the horse stamps and switches his tail, there it will stay until the owner unhooks it.



PINS FAST TO BLANKET.

THE PITCAIRN ISLANDS

Interesting People Descendants of Noted "Bounty" Mutineers.

H.M.S. Algerine, Commander Brooker, sailed from Esquimalt, B.C., for the South Seas, with clothing, books, etc., for the Pitcairn Islanders, the descendants of the Bounty mutineers, who have few visitors.

The residents of Pitcairn Island are a most interesting people. They are of a light copper color, being descendants of Englishmen who intermarried with natives. Their houses, mostly small cottages of three rooms, are built of lumber sawn by hand from native trees, some of the boards for finishing being secured from passing ships and tools from kindly ship carpenters. The men tend their gardens, build boats, fish, etc.

Some grain is grown, but not enough to supply the demands of the islanders and is threshed rudely with flails. The people are of a very religious turn of mind. They built a church many years ago in which is an organ sent to the island by the late Queen Victoria.

The population is about one hundred and fifty in number, and the families are so intermarried that the majority of weddings are between cousins. The oldest man on the island is Governor; he is the executive, legislative and judicial branches all in one.

The first settlers were from the ship Bounty. The vessel left Spithead in 1787, and in the spring of 1789 Fletcher Christian and three companions broke into the captain's cabin and bound him and gagged him, and the master and mates were set adrift in an open boat. They eventually reached land, and the mutineers after various vicissitudes reached Pitcairn Island and founded the colony which now occupies the little isle.

EVERY LITTLE MOVEMENT

In Some Kinds of Business It Has a Cost That's all Its Own

In a large publishing house in Chicago which mails annually millions of circulars, form letters and sample copies the saving of even a single motion in the process of folding, enclosing or addressing means an economy, says a writer in Business, that is well worth thinking about.

When this idea first occurred to an officer of the company he devoted several weeks to a careful and analytical study of the work of the mailing department. The girls who folded and sealed the letters had formerly been allowed to arrange their work to suit themselves. A very little observation of their methods showed that there was much room for improvement.

Experiments were made to determine, in just what order each movement should be made in folding the letter and enclosure, picking them up and inserting them in the envelope. Crude as the first attempt necessarily was, it immediately increased the output of a girl. Further study revealed ways not only of eliminating many motions but of shortening the distance traveled by the hands in the motions that remained.

Finally a plan was devised for arranging and handling the envelopes and their enclosures so that each hand on the completion of one motion, was in the proper position to begin immediately the next motion. The final motion—that of throwing the filled envelopes upon a pile—was entirely eliminated by placing a large basket upon the floor directly under the point where the enclosures were inserted in the envelope.

When the enclosures were once inside the girl simply let go of the envelope and it fell into the basket, gravity doing the work formerly done by the girl. After the girls had been taught the new methods of filling envelopes, their output was nearly four times as great as it had been when they were doing their work haphazard in any way that happened to occur to them.

This sanitary fountain is a decided improvement over the usual style, which forces the drinker to stoop uncomfortably. A rubber hose carries the water to the bottom of the drinking cup, where it continually runs over so that one's lips do not come in contact with the metal.

Asiatic Creeds.

Few people realise the growth of Asiatic cults and religions in North America. It is stated on apparently good authorty that on this continent there are 15,000 sun worshippers, and an equal number of Buddhists.

Probably ten times as many persons have covered the Oriental basis of their new creed with a veneer of Western Christianity. The number of dabblers in the 'mystic' cults of India cannot be guessed.

The Youth of the North.

There is no lack of latent energy in young Canada. It is there and it cries out for scope and activity. What answer shall be given to this insistent cry of the youths of the north for social activity and normal and healthful sport?—St. Johns, Que. News.

Weary Tiredness Changed to Vigor

THAT PLAYED OUT FEELING WAS QUICKLY REMEDIED AND HEALTH RESTORED

Story of a Merchant Who Almost Lost His Business and His Health Through Neglecting Early Symptoms of Disease.

"My life for years has been of sedentary character," writes T. B. Titchfield, head of a well known firm in Buckingham. "Nine hours every day I spent at office work and took exercise only on Sunday. I disregarded the symptoms of ill-health, which were all too apparent to my family. I grew thin, then pale, and before long I was jaundiced — eyes and skin were yellow, my strength and nerve energy were lowered, and I was quite unfitted for business. In the morning a lightness in the head, particularly when I bent over, made me very worried about my health. Most of the laxative medicines I found weakening, and knowing that I had to be at business every day I neglected myself rather than risk further weakness. Of course I grew worse, but by a happy chance I began to use Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I was forcibly struck by the fact that they neither caused griping nor nausea, and it seemed incredible that pills could tone, cleanse and regulate the system without causing any unpleasant after effects. Dr. Hamilton's Pills acted with me just as gentle as nature—they gave new life to my liver, strengthened my stomach, and won me back to perfect good health. My skin is clear, dizziness has disappeared, and my appetite, strength, spirits are perfect."

Refuse anything offered you instead of Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are sure to cure. Sold in 25c boxes, five for $1.00, at all druggists and storekeepers, or postpaid from the Catarrhozone Co., Buffalo, N.Y., and Kingston, Canada.

Asked Renewal of Old Schedule.

A very strong letter has been sent to the C.P.R. by the Board of Trade requesting the restoration of the time table of the morning train from Toronto that used to arrive in Peterborough at 11.15. Since this train was removed there has been a feeling that it was more valuable than was believed.

We are pleased to learn from Mr. Huffman that our informant was mistaken. Of course, never having had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Huffman before, the article was written from an impersonal and unprejudiced point of view, the stories as told by the acquaintances from Millbrook being taken as fact.

Lindsay Lady Won in Scrap

Lindsay Warder: When the human form divine happens to be feminine much is expected therefrom. Woman's dignified independence received a severe set-back by the conduct of two females in a berry patch in South Ops on Wednesday afternoon. The two divines, it is stated, punched each other right and left in true Jack Johnston style.

The mill lasted for several minutes, while calico and locks of gold and grey flitted and floated around the berry patch. After many hard blows and several rounds the Brickville aspirant for pugilistic notoriety got knocked out, leaving the Lindsay female victorious.

VARIOUS HOLY LANDS

Christians call Palestine the Holy Land because it was the birthplace of the Christian religion on earth as well as that of the Saviour whose birth, ministry, and death are inseparably associated with the history of Jerusalem and vicinity. To the Mohammedans Mecca, in Arabia, is the Holy Land, it being the birthplace of Mohammed, the saviour of the followers of that faith.

India is the Holy Land of the Chinese and other Oriental Buddhists, it being the native land of Sakya-Nuni, the supreme Buddha. Elis, one of the several divisions of the ancient Peloponnesus, was the Mecca and the Jerusalem of the ancient Greeks. The temple of Olympus Zeus was situated at Elis, and the sacred festivals were held there each year. With Achaia it is at present a part of Greece.

The believers in the Shinto religion make annual pilgrimages to Sitsa-Kara, the immense stone pillar where their supreme ruler last stood while talking to men.

BUILDING BRANCHES

Canadian Roads Have More Mileage in States Than Latter in Canada

The announcement that Newman Erb, president of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad is incorporating a new company to build branches to the Canadian border causes a Canadian writer on railroad matters to note that while the United States Railways have only 1,485 miles of track in the Dominion, the States have been invaded by Canadian roads to the extent of 7,197 miles divided as follows: Canadian Pacific Railway, 5,391 miles; Grand Trunk System, 1,656 miles; Canadian Northern, 170 miles. The writer goes on to add: "The Grand Trunk had a big fight to obtain admission into New England but its efforts were successful. The main purpose of extending that road into the rich traffic territory of New England is, according to the railway's own contentions, to balance their business between the Eastern and Western States. The Grand Trunk's double track main line lies across Canada like an arm, the elbows at Montreal, the forearm across Ontario, the hand upon five fertile and productive States, with Chicago, the great traffic centre, in its palm. The fingers of this hand are the feeders, which will bring through this gateway the traffic of the west, the northwest and the southwest."

THE OLDEST BASEBALL IN A GLASS CASE

The oldest baseball in the world and the one that was used in the first championship game on record is now in the possession of a sporting goods house in Kansas City. After drifting around for 55 years, it has been covered with gold leaf, mounted on a handsome case containing a placard with the history of the ball written on it, and now is an object of interest to the fans.

The ball is 10 inches in circumference, an inch larger than the regulation one of the present time, and is covered with one piece of leather. It was used in the game between the Intermountain team of Boston and the Portland, Me., team, September 9, 1857, the first championship game ever played, which was won by the Portland club, 47 to 42.

It was the first game in which the nine-innings rules prevailed, and the first one in which the ball was pitched instead of tossed. The game was played on Boston Commons.

The ball was formerly owned by Josh Westerhouse of Dunlap, Kas., who, at the age of 13 years, was bat boy for the Intermountain men. He obtained possession of it after the game, and when he moved to Kansas several years later brought the ball with him. Years ago he gave it to P. M. Wilhite of Emporia, who has owned it since.

Several years ago August Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati club, after a search lasting for several years, found a ball which he said was the oldest in existence, having been used in a game in 1860.

LEAVE IRON CHURCH

Anglicans at Victoria Abandon Old Landmark of Pioneer Days

A notable event in the history of the Anglicans in the west is the passing of the old "Iron Church" of St. John, at Victoria, B.C. The building which the congregation left for a magnificent new Church of St. John, is indissolubly connected with the memory of that charitable women, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts. She it was who presented the Church, the iron pieces of which were brought to the west by Bishop George Hills, who travelled around the Horn and arrived in Victoria only to find that the Hudson's Bay Company had been before him and had built a church on what is now known as Cathedral Hill, and which had received the dignified title of Cathedral.

The bishop thereupon surrendered the church for parochial purposes. A lot was bought from the Hudson's Bay company for the small sum of about $200. Recently the same site passed back into the hands of the Hudson's Bay Co., but this time for the slightly different sum of $150,000.

The sacred edifice was consecratd by Bishop Hills on September 13, 1860, receiving the name of St. John the Divine. The first rector of the church was Rev. R. J. Dundas, who remained in charge from 1860 to 1865.

NOT MUCH LARGE TIMBER

But Much Pulpwood Found in Lac La Biche Region of Alberta

It had been reported that there was considerable large timber north of Lac LaBiche, in northern Alberta, but an examination by Mr. S. H. Clark for the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior, brought out the fact, which has too frequently been the case, that the quantity of large timber is small and only in a few scattered areas. There is, however, a large quantity of immature spruce and jack pine which needs only protection from fire to be a valuable crop from pulpwood or lumber. The land is generally covered with muskeg, and the soil, nowhere first-class, becomes lighter and sandy towards the east, where it consists of sandy jack pine ridges with muskeg between. The undrained muskegs make the timber growth slow, but the whole district is more suited for timber growth than for agriculture.

HOW TO MAKE RAIN

Dynamite in Large Quantities Necessary to Produce Results

Successful experiments in rain-making were tried at Battle Creek, Michigan, where 4,500 pounds of dynamite were exploded, in 1,500 shots, and a downpour of rain followed, without wind, thunder or lightning.

There was a firing station every one-eighth mile. The dynamite was laid on the ground in 3 pound charges and exploded every few minutes at each of the fifteen stations. The battle started at 10.30 in the morning and continued until 3.30 in the afternoon. The detonations could be heard for a distance of 30 miles.

About 1.30 a slight precipitation was noticed, but this was more like a mist than a rain. When the firing ceased, the sky was overcast with clouds. About 4.30 the rain began to fall and continued in showers until eight o'clock. the government rain gauge showed a fall of nearly half an inch—.44 being the official report.

NO OPERATION FOR GALL-STONES

No operation will be necessary for Gall-stones, Kidney-stones, or Gravel —SANOL, the German remedy discovered by a great German scientist, will surely relieve the agony of the sufferer from these complaints. It will also cure with equal certainty and promptness kidney trouble, lumbago, and all other diseases caused by the presence of uric acid in the system. It is also most valuable as a preventive for these diseases and will often prevent a serious illness if taken when the first symptoms appear.

Save the pain, danger and cost of an operation by using

SANOL

Relief will be rapid, the deposits will pass off rapidly and without pain. We have addresses and strong testimonials—some written from residents of Winnipeg, to the number of 300. We have 27 testimonials from one small Alberta town. We have a most convincing testimonial from one Winnipeg lady who passed several large gall-stones, after taking one bottle of SANOL. We are willing and anxious to furnish you with the addresses of these people.
